Father Draft, Postwar Bill Action Due This Week

House Likely to Pass Fulbright Resolution; Senate Expected to Kill Wheeler Plan

Big Farm Loan Asked

BILLION-DOLLAR LOAN plan to help farmers expand production urged by head of Farmers Union. Page 6.

Highly Controversial

Congressional action on two outstanding issues before the members—postwar international action to preserve peace, and the drafting of American fathers—last night was scheduled for early in the week as House and Senate got down to serious business following their summer recess.

Democratic acceptance of a Republican amendment to the Fulbright resolution calling for United States participation in world machinery to curb aggression promised last night to bring certain House approval of the resolution. The Foreign Affairs Committee was to be called into session at 10 a. m. today, before the House meets, to act on insertion of the phrase "without impairment of its constitutional processes" in connection with this country's proposed participation.

Two-Thirds Majority Seems Certain

Should the committee vote acceptance of the amendment, already approved by Chairman Bloom of New York, and by Representative Fulbright (Democrat) of Arkansas, author of the resolution, House passage of the measure by at least a two-thirds vote appeared assured.

Meanwhile, on the Senate side, Administration leaders and the armed services were counting on Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff, and others, to deliver the finishing blows to the Wheeler bill to defer the drafting of fathers at least until January 1. Senate floor debate on the bill is set for tomorrow, but the Military Affairs Committee will hear General Marshall today. Bernard M. Baruch, advisor to President Roosevelt, also has been invited to appear at the hearing, and Mayor LaGuardia of New York, has announced that he will attend to testify.

Senate advocates of a postwar peace plan will endeavor to broaden the Fulbright resolution as it merely would have Congress express itself for creation of "appropriate international machinery with power adequate to establish and to maintain a just and lasting peace, and as favoring participation by the United States therein."

Administration Confident

Administration leaders are facing the test of the draft issue with confidence. They expect the testimony of Marshall and Baruch, if he appears, will clinch the arguments advanced by earlier witnesses as to the necessity for drafting approximately 446,000 fathers to carry out long-planned global war strategy.

Little else is on the schedule of either legislative branch this week. However, Marvin Jones, Food Administrator, is expected to outline his 1944 food production program to the House Agriculture Committee today. Although he has indicated that a system of support prices will be the key to his program, Jones so far has avoided giving details.

Members of the committee are expected to question the adminis-

Fire in Theater, Frank Fay ad libs As Crowd Leaves

New York, Sept. 19 (INS).—An audience of 1400 persons walked out this afternoon on Comedian Frank Fay—and Fay was tickled pink.

Fay, a performer in the Broadway show, "Laugh Time," ad libbed from the stage while the audience filed in orderly fashion to the street as the theater filled with smoke from fire in a pipe draft.

Damage was slight and the only excitement was caused by great throngs that gathered outside the theater in "Shubert Alley" on West 44th st.

'Back the Attack'

(Only Half of District's Bond Quota Raised. Page B-1.)

By Bert Kemmerer

Post Staff Writer

Men whose addresses have recently been Guadalcanal, New Guinea, Attu, North Africa and Sicily—125 of them—the convalescent wounded at Walter Reed, Forest Glen, St. Elizabeths and the Naval Hospital at Bethesda will see "Back the Attack," this afternoon.

Men who have done in the field all the things shown in the great arena of the Army's greatest show will watch with interest the cadence of the crack drill platoon from the Military Police, the whirling speed of limbered caissons, the grinding roar of tanks and tank-destroyers.

And they will watch the demonstrations with expert and critical eyes. They know their significance.

Col. Frank T. McCabe has arranged for a special section in the grandstand for the wounded soldiers, and the polished, elite teams that present the action show will give their acts an additional flourish. For there will be men in the audience today who well understand what superior weapons mean—and superior training. The wounded have the right to be critics.

Sunday's mighty host of visitors held true to predictions in the show's attendance. One hundred and seventy-five thousand persons saw the hundreds of exhibits and the arena show. It was the second largest attendance mark, the previous record having been set Sunday a week ago when 195,000 visitors were recorded.

Exactly 78,750 persons visited the giant B-24 Liberator bomber yesterday afternoon alone, John Gordon, of the AAF public relations staff said. Figures for the night show will be available later.

Total attendance reached 1,179,000, officials said.

As a part of the Signal Corps realistic special show following the regular afternoon performance and guardmount, carrier pigeons were released from the Capitol Building by Senator Tom Connally of Texas, and from the Treasury Building by Secretary Morgenthau, Theodore R. Gamble and John Reilly. Gamble is national director of the War Finance Division and Reilly is District War Loan campaign chairman.

Secretary Morgenthau's pigeon winged its way to the pigeon loft in the Signal Corps area on the Monument Grounds in exactly one

Investigators Pay Gallinger Surprise Visit

Find Kitchen Dirty, One Nurse on Duty For Four Floors

By John Singerhoff

Post Staff Writer

In a surprise visit to Gallinger Hospital at 5 p. m. yesterday, three members of a Senate subcommittee found cockroaches in the kitchen, dirty stoves and utensils and only one nurse to care for four floors in the tuberculosis building.

Described as only "a preliminary visit" by Senator Holman (Republican) of Oregon, chairman of the subcommittee, the group also included Senator Bushfield (Republican) of South Dakota and Senator Buck (Republican) of Delaware.

The three split up after meeting Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent of Gallinger, and while Senator Bushfield inquired into Bocock's administration, the other two visited the kitchen and tuberculosis sections.

It was from the latter section that Congress received a petition from 149 patients protesting poor food and insanitary conditions.

The group, appointed by Chairman McCarran of the Senate District Committee to investigate the hospital, was reluctant to discuss conditions they observed. They said their findings would be submitted direct to the entire committee.

"Condemns" Old Buildings

Senator Holman, however, was outspoken in condemning the group of ancient buildings housing both white and Negro tubercular patients.

"Those buildings should be condemned immediately," he declared. "I understand they were built some 50 years ago."

He discovered in one of the outbuildings—T. B. No. 1—a roof so badly in need of repair that patients are forced to move their beds during wet weather. In this building one patient told the Senator he had been fed skimmed milk and that one day the meal consisted of one sardine.

Another patient complained that only about four meals a week were fit to eat.

"The bread is sour most of the time," said a third patient.

Dinner They Missed

"Today," the man volunteered, "we had bologna, spaghetti and cherries for dinner."

Senator Holman described the annexes as in "very bad condition," and asserted it was impossible to keep them clean and sani-

School Bells To Toll Today For 85,000

War Work Expected To Cut Enrollment Figures This Year

Schools open today for Washington's 85,000 youngsters, but school officials fear attendance in the senior high schools will be something less than normal.

Work permits were issued to about 25,000 for summer work and at least 3000 of these are expected to continue their jobs despite counseling by school administrators to return to classes, if only on a part-time basis.

Beginning Tuesday, WMC employment counselors will be stationed at Franklin Administration Building to talk to those applying for new work permits, and those who have not definitely lined up a job will be advised to take part-time work in essential activities.

At the end of the week employment office and school personnel will decide how to adjust school and working hours.

Opening Hours

Seniors, 16 years of age or older who want business jobs, are being advised to consider the coordinated work-school plan, whereby qualified youngsters are placed in jobs under supervision of school coordinators and receive credit for work done.

This year's expected enrollment will be 2000 less than that of last fall. In prewar years, when Washington was less populated, school enrollments averaged over 90,000.

Motorists have been asked to be more cautious during times when boys and girls will be on the streets to and from school. About 10,000 will be children 5 to 7 years of age.

Opening today for the first time will be an eight-room temporary addition to Benning Elementary School, Benning rd., near Minnesota ave. se.

Elementary schools open at 9 a. m. today, vocational schools at 8:30 a. m. and junior and senior high schools at 9:30 a. m., with one exception. Browne Junior High School for Negro students, 24th st. and Benning rd. ne., will operate on a staggered shift.

New students must bring vaccination certificates. In most cases they should report to schools nearest their homes. However, new senior high students should report to Roosevelt High if planning an intensive business course or to McKinley High for shop courses. Negro students may take shop at Armstrong High, academic work at Dunbar and business training at Cardozo.

Civil Service Rule Relaxed To Speed Federal Promotions

Employes entering Federal service at salaries of $2000 or less now may be granted promotions involving $300 or more, in 30 days' time, the Civil Service Commission announced yesterday.

Since January of this year restrictions have made it necessary for employes to work six months before promotion, no matter what their entrance pay.

Under the new ruling, those entering at a salary above $2000 but not exceeding $2600 may receive raises after 90 days' employment.

Old procedures are retained for $300 and $600 promotions to positions for which the entrance salary is more than $2600, however. Service must be six months for a $300 promotion, 12 months for a $600 raise.

At the same time the Civil Service said employes without a classified status, as well as those with classified status, come under the above regulations.

Exceptions to the time rulings may be made, the Commission announced, and also to the minimum standards of training and experience required for positions if the employe meets the time requirement and has had actual experience in the line of work.

Time exceptions must be submitted to the commission for prior consideration and cannot be approved by directors of personnel subject to post-audit by the commission as has been done in the past, it was announced.

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Sept. 19.—German troops were fleeing from the Mediterranean Island of Sardinia today under attack by two Italian divisions and an Allied communique said their evacuation to Corsica was "almost completed."

(The British radio said French patriots and Italian troops, combining in action against the Germans, also had seized control of Ajaccio, capital city of Corsica, but that German troops, reinforced by the Sardinia evacuation, had occupied Bastia, small Corsican seaport and railway terminal on the northeast coast.)

(Reuter's news agency reported in an Istanbul dispatch received in London, according to the INS, that the Dodecanese island of Castelorizo has been occupied by British troops.

(British troops also disembarked on the Greek Aegean island of Samos on Saturday, said the dispatch. Castelorizo is 90 miles east of Rhodes.)

Nazi Line Shortened

The American Fifth Army continued its steady expansion of the Salerno bridgehead in the heightening battle for Italy, capturing the mountain village of Altaville, 10 miles inland, and seizing the nearby town of Battipaglia, once an important Axis air base.

Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark's forces made other penetrations into enemy positions at unspecified points and patrols pushed out further beyond the zone where German lines had been reported earlier to be thinning out.

The German high command communique anounced that Nazi troops in southern Italy "have detached themselves from the enemy in accordance with plan and have taken

7 Killed, 53 Hurt As Crowded Bus And Train Collide

Johnston City, Ill., Sept. 19 (AP). Seven persons were killed and at least 53 others suffered injuries today when a crowded Greyhound bus, Chicago-bound from Memphis, Tenn., collided with a two-car Diesel-powered Missouri Pacific Railroad passsenger train at a crossing 2 miles south of here.

All but five of the casualties were passengers on the bus, Coroner Lon W. Gasaway of Williamson County said. The train, running from Marion, Ill., to St. Louis, had only three passengers and three crew members. Two members of the crew and the three passengers suffered minor injuries.

Among the bus passengers who were injured were Dr. Luciano Milla Cisneros, 53, Honduran Minister to Guatemala, and his daughter, Sofia Milla, 22. Their injuries were only slight and hospital attendants said they were expected to recover quickly.

Nazis Seize British Prisoners of Italy

London, Sept. 19 (UP).—The German propaganda agency Transocean said today that British prisoners in war camps in central and northern Italy had been taken over by the Germans and that most of them had been sent to Germany.

The broadcast, heard by the Associated Press, said that in a number of cases Italians had opened the gates to prisoners of war, but that most of those who gained their liberty had been rounded up.

Russians Open Gateway to Smolensk, Free 1200 Villages

By Natalia Rene

International News Service Staff Writer

Moscow, Sept. 19.—Russian troops captured more than 1200 towns and villages on nine separate fronts today in the greatest sweeping advance of the Russo-German war that brought the Red army to within 40 miles of Smolensk and less than 30 miles from the Dnieper River.

Soviet forces stormed into two vital outposts of Smolensk after four days of a new Russian offensive northwest of Moscow. In the Ukraine, where the Nazi withdrawal rapidly is becoming a rout, the Russians captured Zherebets, southeast of Zaporozhe and only 24 miles from the Nazis Dnieper River line. Another column drove to a point 3½ miles northwest of Chernigov, which is 30 miles from the Dnieper.

Occupation of more than 1200 localities in the past 24 hours topped by 500 the greatest number of towns and villages ever liberated in one day. Seven hundred localities were freed Saturday all along the blazing front covering two-thirds of the north-south fighing line, raising the total of towns liberated in 48 hours to 1900.

Special Order by Stalin

The Red Army's newest offensive against Smolensk was announced in a special order of the day by Premier-Marshal Joseph Stalin.

Blasting a wide gap in the strongly fortified German line on the central front, the Soviets seized the big rail junction of Yartsevo, 40 miles from Smolensk on the route to Moscow, and overran what Stalin described as "the most important center of resistance on the road to Smolensk," the town of Dukhouschchina, 10 miles northeast of Yartsevo.

"Thus," said Stalin, "the strong German center of resistance which has been called the gate to Smolensk now has been broken open."

A number of other strong points on the route to Smolensk, number one Russian city in German hands, also were captured in four days of fierce fighting, Stalin's order revealed.

Krasnograd Falls

On the southern front, smashing new gains were scored by Red Army columns driving on Kiev and Dnieperopetrovsk, Dnieper River cities forming the nucleus of the Nazis' last-ditch defense line in the Ukraine.

Among the larger towns seized during Sunday were Krasnograd, 55 miles southwest of Kharkov; Priluki, 80 miles east of Kiev; Lubni, 120 miles southeast of Kiev, and Trubchevsk, 50 miles south of

The paper said the Eastern Front was moving "an enormous step toward the frontiers of Europe."

RAF Blasts Rhineland

U. S. Airmen Shower Bombs On Nazi Fighter Base at Lille

By Pugh Moore

Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 19.—Great formations of Allied planes plied back and forth across the English Channel all day today, and early tonight strongly-escorted bombers thundered eastward to carry the new round-the-clock offensive into its fifth day and night.

American and British daylight raiders bombed targets in France and Holland. United States Marauders showered explosives on the important Nazi fighter base at Lille while RAF Typhoon bombers struck at airfields at Merville, in northern France, and Woensdrecht, in Holland. Later RAF Mitchells attacked industrial targets near Bethune, France.

RAF, Dominion and Allied fighters provided escort and carried out offensive sweeps, shooting down six Nazi fighters. Three Allied fighters were reported missing.

Berlin had its first respite in four nights last night as RAF Mosquito bombers, which had attacked the German capital for three straight nights, turned to the industrial Rhineland and bombed unspecified targets there. Other RAF planes laid mines in Nazi sea shipping lanes to round out the overnight assaults without loss to the British.

Churchill Back Home From Parleys

By Edward D. Ball

Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 19.—Prime Minister Churchill, bearing the secrets of the Quebec and Washington war councils, returned home tonight and plunged into preparation of a report to the nation on his talks with President Roosevelt covering the whole of the global situation, both military and diplomatic.

Mrs. Churchill, subaltern Mary Churchill, his daughter, and Brendan Bracken, British Minister of Information, came with him.

The Prime Minister will open a two-day debate at a forthcoming reconvening of Parliament, and although much of what happened on the other side of the Atlantic following his arrival in Canada on August 10 must remain untold, he will give a general account for which the ears of the world will be attuned.

The Italian surrender, which came during Churchill's absence of six weeks, will provide the victory theme for his speech. At the same time, his appearance in Commons after his longest war-time absence from the country yet, will give him an opportunity to answer critics who have been sharpshooting at Allied strategy in Italy.

In the diplomatic field it is expected he will shed more light on British-American-Russian relations and the projected three-power con-

Pearl Harbor, Sept. 19.—The Japanese airbase on Tarawa Island, in the northern Gilbert Group, and Nauru Island, west of the Gilberts, were attacked by strong American Naval forces last night and today (East Longitude Time), Admiral Chester W. Nimitz announced.

The form of assault on the enemys' island bases was not specified in the admiral's communique, but they probably were heavily bombed by carrier-based torpedo planes and divebombers.

Was a 9-Hour Attack

The attack on the islands, which form the eastern spearhead of Japan's Pacific defense perimeter, came less than three weeks after the September 1 bombing of Marcus Island, 1200 miles from Tokyo.

(In the Marcus Island raid American planes blasted the base for nine hours, smashing 80 per cent of the Japanese installations there. Admiral Nimitz reported later).

Navy Now Has 14,072 Vessels, 18,000 Planes

The United States now has the mightiest fleet in world history, 14,072 vessels and "the most powerful naval air force in the world," more than 18,000 naval planes, the Navy proudly revealed yesterday.

The figures were included in a published inventory that showed the tremendous expansion accomplished in the past three years.

Admiral Nimitz's communique today:

"Strong Pacific Ocean area forces today conducted a heavy raid on the Japanese bases on Tarawa Island in the northern Gilbert group and on Mauru Island to the west of the Gilbert group.

"These operations were carried out according to plan during the night preceding and for a good portion of the day of September 19, East Longitude Time.

"Details of the operation are not immediately available."

Today's raids were not the first on those Japanese bases. Both have been bombed previously by land-based heavy bombers, presumably operating from American airfields in the Solomons or central Pacific area.

Apparently Surprised Japs

The raids, if made from carriers, were among the most daring attempted by a United States task force since the objectives were bases at which the enemy could

In Air, On Sea

U. S. Fleet Mightiest In All History

By Hamilton W. Faron
Associated Press Staff Writer

A giant fleet, "mightiest in world history," carries the United States flag today on all oceans and seas.

And, in the skies, is "the most powerful naval air force in the world."

The Navy proudly gave the descriptions yesterday in an inventory disclosing gigantic production of ships, planes, ammunition—production that still is adding swiftly to the "greatest sea-air power of earth."

On the seas, the Navy observed, the fleet is composed of 14,072 vessels including 613 warships. Three years ago there were only 1076 vessels, numbering but 383 fighting ships.

The Navy Air Forces have more than 18,000 planes—dive bombers, torpedo bombers, fighters, patrol ships, planes of all types. Three years ago there were 1744 naval planes of all types.

Speed of the production that has built up the fleet and air arm is portrayed in the comparative figures:

"In July, 1940, the Navy received 25 new airplanes; in June, 1943, almost 2000."

Emphasis in the swift job of building the world's mightiest fleet has been laid on hard-hitting warships, combatant vessels that can battle it out with any enemy craft.

In that fighting category 333 new ships have been completed since July, 1940, at a cost of three billion dollars. But the other types have not been neglected. Mine craft and patrol boats built in the last three years total 1274 and cost 820 million dollars; auxiliaries number 151, and district craft 654.

Landing craft, the boats that carry troops, tanks and other fighting equipment ashore on strange beaches to wrest them from enemy control, make up the largest total—12,964 new boats costing one billion dollars.

"No naval construction program of camparable size and speed," the Navy says, "has ever been accomplished by any other nation. Ability to build this huge new naval force—and to continue to build at the present rate—is one of the foundation stones of our military strategy.

Makes Attack Strategy Feasible

"It underlies our amphibious attacks in the Pacific, the Atlantic and the Mediterranean. It protects our long, exterior supply routes running across thousands of miles of ocean.

"Most important, it makes feasible a strategy of attack, with all the risks it implies. Ability to build—or, if necessary, to rebuild—on this scale is one of the basic advantages which the American Navy holds over fleets of all other nations."

The production step-up in combatant ships—battleships, aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers, destroyer escorts and submarines—has been especially sharp, the Navy reports, and tonnage of fighting ships produced in the first six months of 1943 exceeds by 20 times the tonnage completed in the first six months of the "defense program."

Emphasis throughout the three-year period—in which 58 warships were lost and 129 transferred to Allied nations or converted to noncombat use—was shifted from one type to another as urgency dictated.

As the battleship program moved into the clear and giant battles were being fought between aircraft carriers in the Coral Sea, at Midway and in southwest Pacific waters, the need was for more aircraft carriers. They were produced.

Bougainville Bases Are Smashed Hard In Triple Attack

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific (Monday), Sept. 20.—American warplanes have destroyed 14 more enemy aircraft in renewed raids on Japanese bases in the northern Solomon Islands, Gen. Douglas MacArthur's headquarters announced today.

The attack was centered on airdromes in the Buin area at the southern tip of Bougainville Island. The wrecked enemy planes were identified as fighters.

This new success was scored in the course of a triple blasting by bombers of the Japanese-held Kahili and Ballale air fields.

Both have been repeated targets for American bombers of all categories, and Ballale has been described as having been rendered temporarily unusuable.

60 Jap Planes in Fight

Sixty interceptors from the enemy's growing fighter fleet in the north Solomons area rose to challenge the bombers in their three-ply attack, a headquarters communique said. It was from among these that the bombers and their fighter escort bagged today's score of enemy aircraft.

Allied airpower also was felt in the New Guinea area to the west. Bombers of Lieut. Gen. George C. Kenney's Fifth Air Force dumped 16 tons of explosives on Finschhafen, one of Japan's last remaining bases on the Huon Gulf.

In an air patrol off the coast of New Britain, two Japanese barges laden with troops were destroyed.

The Allied base at Darwin, Australia, was raided yesterday by the enemy, but the communique said no damage resulted.

A small enemy cargo ship was bombed and set afire by an Allied reconnaissance plane east of Kavieng, New Ireland, and other heavy bombers damaged a 2000-ton Japanese merchantman off Cape St. George in the same general sector.

At Hansa Bay on the north coast of New Guinea between Wewak and Madang, a third enemy cargo vessel, of 1200 tons, fell victim to a night attack by a single medium bomber. The ship was destroyed, the communique said.

Dili Attacked

Heavy and medium bombers and attack planes joined in the assault on the Finschhafen targets, bombing installations and troop centers at Geldsbach, Finsch harbor and the Tami Islands, and following up with numerous machine-gun attacks from low altitude.

Another New Guinea objective was the enemy-held village of Kaipait, where bivouacs were strafed by Allied fighter planes and a considerable number of huts were destroyed.

Small shipping and shore structures on Kimba Bay, New Britain, and on Rooke and Ritter Islands in Vitiaz Strait northwest of Finschhafen came under the guns of Allied long-range fighters.

Dili, on enemy-held Portuguese Timor, was subjected to a night attack by Australian-based bombers.

Besides the raid on the Darwin area, in which nine Japanese planes participated, the enemy made a weak and ineffective aerial stab at Hopoi, an airfield and village recently fallen into Allied hands 20 miles east of Lae, New Guinea.

Support for Postwar Planning Unit Grows

New York, Sept. 18 (AP).—Two nationally prominent labor officials joined tonight in urging immediate creation of a joint labor-management-Government Council to prepare basic plans now for the postwar task of reconverting industry to peacetime production.

George M. Harrison, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, and James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, outlined the plan for the joint industry council in addresses broadcast over station WEAF on the "For This We Fight" program.

U. S. Tank Platoon Wrecks 30 Jap Pillboxes Near Munda

The following story was written by Tech. Sergt. Samuel E. Stavisky, Marine Corps Combat correspondent, on leave as assistant city editor of The Post.

Somewhere in the South Pacific (Delayed)—A platoon of Marine tanks under the command of First Lieut. Robert W. Blake, 25, of Canton, Ohio, destroyed 30 enemy jungle-entrenched pillboxes in three days during the recent battle for Munda.

The pillboxes were dug deep in the coral, buttressed by coconut logs, and well camouflaged.

In the lead tank was Pvt. First Class Eugene A. Hall, 19, of 506 North Jefferson st., Arlington Va.

Flanked by the infantry, the tanks rumbled toward a river bed and the enemy.

"First we knew of the Japs' whereabouts," related the lieutenant, "was when we spotted a black oblong slot in the brush on the far side of the stream bed. It was a pillbox and we opened upon it.

"Soon we saw another pillbox, and another, and it developed we were in the middle of a pillbox concentration. Keeping formation, we smashed into the whole lot of them, and running into a bivouac area, we sprayed it with shot.

"Heavy machine gun fire was thrown against us for 15 minutes before we could find the source of fire. Shells rattled off the tank. We could smell burnt lead and the tank walls became scorching hot.

"Then, we caught the burbles of light from the muzzle of a machine gun and charged into it, only to discover two tremendous pillboxes confronting up. Our bullets had no effect on these little forts, so we battered them with armor-piercing shell.

"After four hours of continous battle, we returned to our base, having knocked out for sure 11 pillboxes."

Hall's echelon tackled eight pillboxes on the hill and wiped them out.

The next day the tank column once again headed in along the coast, ran into five more pillboxes and a bivouac area. The Japs struck back, hit the infantry hard and for a while the tanks were cut off in the deep weeds and jungle brush.

"We were afraid to shoot lest we fire on our own soldiers," said Blake, "That gave the Japs a chance to close in and they pummeled us with everything they had. An explosive was dropped on the lead tank. We were jarred but otherwise unhurt.

"The Japs respect tanks but they're not afraid of them. We can vouch for that. They went after us with antitank guns and explosives and we had a devil of a time, after using up all our ammunition, we managed to crawl back to our rear."

Neext day, with little sleep or rest because of the incessant Japanese sniper activity, the tankmen and their machines went into action again.

The Japs apparently were expecting the tanks to return, for they took to the trees and sprayed them with flame-throwers.

One audacious Jap sneaked up on a tank and placed a magnetic mine under the nose of Hall, who was driving. The mine blast damaged the tank but Hall withdrew to safety.

employ long-range, land bombers to attack the carriers and their supporting warships.

Admiral Nimitz's communique hints the Japanese were surprised as they were at Marcus when the bombers struck in the darkness of early morning. If the bombers were able to press home their attacks for several hours, their first assaults probably knocked out whatever air power the enemy had available for interception or for bombing the task force ships.

In all probability the Japanese air strength at both bases was light, since the enemy has had heavy plane losses in the New Guinea and Solomons campaigns.

Following so closely behind the Marcus raid, this attack indicates the American Navy has mustered aircraft carrier replacements for losses suffered in the early months of the war and it forecasts increasing thrusts deeper into enemy territory.

The main use of Tarawa and Nauru to the enemy has been for plane reconnaissance and bombing raids on American outposts at Canton and Funa Futi Islands. Nauru also is a major source of phosphate for the Japanese.

French Border Officers Held

New York, Sept. 19 (AP).—The French radio at Dakar said today in a broadcast recorded by CBS that former French army officers were being arrested by the Germans in provinces bordering on Italy on suspicion of having joined the underground resistance movement.

Germans Left Many Dead on Salerno Line

By Reynolds Packard
Representing the Combined American Press

With the Fifth Army in Italy, Sept. 19.—In an effort to break contact with the Fifth Army the Germans pulled out of some sectors of the Salerno Front so fast in recent days that for the first time since the Allied landings here they left quantities of dead unburied on the battlefields. American burial patrols, supervised by a chaplain and composed of service troops, penetrated into no-man's-land this morning to give the German dead a Christian burial, erecting crosses over the graves.

I was on a knob which enabled me to see the occupation of one of three towns which fell to the Allies in the past 12 hours and could see at first hand the enemy tactics. They fought day and night with machineguns, mortars, rifles and 88 millimeter guns, sent out patrols and utilized sneak air raids up to the very last minute, then firing ceased suddenly and the enemy had withdrawn.

I saw a number of prisoners taken today and they were the most dilapidated soldiers I have seen in a long time. Their uniforms—most of them wore khaki shorts and green visored caps—were badly patched and torn. They seemed short of food, mainly because the Allied strategic air forces had prevented them from getting anything from the north.

The German air force has shown a slackening of power in the past several days. In one area, where during the first six days the average was 36 sneak raids a day, the number of raids has fallen to an average of 17 in the last three days.

Bombing of the Bay of Salerno, which the sailors named "Bombay" because of the constant attacks to which it was subjected, have also diminished.

An official Allied announcement disclosed for the first time that Marshal Pietro Badoglio, who took over the government of Italy when Benito Mussolini was ousted, is now in Allied-held Italian territory.

Bombers and fighters of the Allies' northwest African air forces, operating in skies swept clear of enemy opposition, lashed out once more at German air bases in the vicinity of Rome.

Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's British Eighth Army advanced at a rapid pace. His column pushing up the coastal highway already had joined with the Fifth Army neary Agropoli and official reports did not say how far the swift thrust had carried into the mountainous interior where enemy troops and motor convoys were fleeing toward the north.

The German garrison on Sardinia was believed to have been too small to offer any substantial resistance to the attacks from two divisions of the Italian army and from Allied aircraft which swept Sardinia constantly in recent weeks.

Easy Occupation

At any rate, the German flight across the 7½-mile wide strait of Bonifacio to Corsica paved the way for easy Allied occupation of the island.

Sardinia possesses ten airfields which the Axis used for military purposes. Although hardly as well situated for basing heavy strategic bombers as the recently captured airdromes in southern Italy, they would be valuable bases for operations against northern Italy.

Sardinia's loss pushes the enemy air forces from the last bases which could easily command vital shipping lanes.

As enemy resistance continued to weaken in the Salerno area, American and British troops poured ashore in ever increasing numbers to strengthen the already powerful army under Clark's command.

Near the southern edge of the bridgehead German opposition was reported particularly weak and there was no indication the Nazis would attempt a further major stand in that area.

The German communique listed losses inflicted on the Allied forces at Salerno as 10,000 killed and wounded and 4429 prisoners. Between September 8 and 17, the Nazi war bulletin declared, German air and naval units sank three Allied cruisers, two destroyers, one torpedo boat, 15 landing boats and nine transports of 58,000 tons. To these unconfirmed damages to Allied naval forces the Germans added a British destroyer of the Jervis class which they claimed was sunk yesterday.

The German withdrawal from Sardinia and Salerno was accompanied by a continued retreat of Nazi air power under fresh pounding of its southernmost Italian mainland bases by powerful formations from Lieut. Gen. Carl A. Spaatz's Northwest African Air Forces.

American fighters destroyed several dozen enemy planes in a swift raid on the big Foggia air base near the Adriatic.

Enemy fighters failed to challenge the Allied air domination.

Flying Fortresses blanketed the Viterbo airfield, 50 miles northwest of Rome, with bombs, scoring direct hits among 50 planes parked on the ground. Medium bombers returned to Pratica di Mare, south of Rome, and scored hits among between 100 and 150 grounded planes, leaving smoke spiralling as high as 5000 feet from burning Junkers-88 transports. Another medium formation attacked the Ciampino airdrome south of Rome.

Rhodes Hit Again

American Liberators from the Middle East struck again at rail yards at Pescara, on the Adriatic coast across from Rome.

Four-engined RAF raiders again struck at Maritza in Rhodes, in the Dodecanese Islands.

The day brought nothing fresh from the British Fifth Corps troops who previously had encountered outposts of a German parachute division at Goia, about 30 miles north of Taranto. It had been assumed that the light enemy screening force there would withdraw to avoid encirclement.

(BBC, quoting its North Africa correspondent in a broadcast recorded by CBS, said the British Fifth Corps was advancing in two directions, up the road from Bari on the Adriatic and westward toward the hilly center of the Italian mainland.)

Taylor Family Justly Proud of General's 'Invasion'

Nazi-infested Rome, but Tommie had won a dime from Jackie yesterday playing badminton.

The little house was peacefully decorated with prints and furniture brought from Japan, where General Taylor studied the Japanese language in 1939 and where he rented his house to Clark Lee, newspaper man, who wrote the story of the exploit of General Taylor and Col. William Tudor Gardiner visiting Rome.

General Taylor and Colonel Gardiner, with an Italian officer as escort, slipped into Rome under cover of darkness, rode through the streets of the city so close to Nazi troops that Taylor said he could have reached out of the car and touched them on the shoulder, interviewed Badoglio, spent the next day closeted in a room assigned them, and just as unnoticed slipped out the next night to fly to General Eisenhower's headquarters.

Mrs. Taylor was really relieved to hear what had happened, for only Friday she had received a letter from General Taylor telling her he was going on a "tough but interesting" mission and that his letters might not be so regular from now on. It was written on September 6, just a short time before he began his dangerous mission. She knows now he accomplished that mission and returned safely.

And as for Jackie—well—he is an autograph collector but yesterday when he left for the game he confided to his mother:

"They will be asking for my autograph today."

General Taylor, who was born in Missouri, came here in 1939, after leaving Tokyo, to attend the Army War College. He went to Texas in 1941, came back here in the same year and went overseas in 1942.

Only Po, the black cocker spaniel, refused to join in the quiet pride the family took in the exploit of the father. Po, being a timid soul, remained for the most part under the living room couch, with his black nose tentatively poking forth occasionally.

And so Tommie was called in from his badminton game, made to put on his shirt, and brush his hair in order to pose for a picture.

Hungry Italians Beg Allied Mercy

More Grief

New Unrest Confronts Nazis in Italy

By Russell Landstrom
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 19.—The announcement that Premier Marshal Pietro Badoglio was safe behind Allied lines raised fresh obstacles tonight to the embattled Germans on the Italian Peninsula.

Fighting between Italians and the Nazis continued in the Milan and Turin areas, it was reported, despite Benito Mussolini's Saturday radio appeal to renew the fight against the Allies.

Obviously worried over Badoglio's plans, the Berlin radio increased its fulminations against Mussolini's successor within a few hours after Allied headquarters made known that he was in Italian territory. The radio asserted that he had gone to North Africa to enroll Italian prisoners into the Allied ranks and declared that such recruitment violated international law.

While the reappearance of Badoglio strengthened a London impression that his government might declare war on Germany, the Nazis continued to play up their "liberation" of Mussolini, declaring that immediately after he was freed he paid Hitler a visit lasting several days.

The Berlin radio said a republican Fascist party group in Milan held its first meeting "which culminated in a demonstration of loyalty towards the Duce and the Fuehrer."

But Mussolini's Saturday radio appeal to Italians to return to the Axis fold, described in the Berliner Lokalanzeiger today as "the Duce's fighting speech after his liberation," appeared to have had little effect on the Italian population.

Reports of continued Italian resistance to the Nazis came from Swiss and Spanish sources and it appeared that the Germans had been forced to seize practically all Italian railroads and to stop all freedom of movement in the occupied zones.

The Berlin radio itself acknowledged that the Germans had occupied the Swiss Italian boarder crossing of Ponte Chiasso Sunday morning and were controlling all important ways across the frontier.

Without giving a reason for the action, the Germans said all traffic had been stopped between Italy and Switzerland.

The union of anti-Fascist parties in Milan was said to be inciting Italians to even bolder resistance against the Nazis and Swiss reports also said that Italian patriots led by army officers had organized a large scale sabotage campaign against German works in the Rome region.

The harassed Germans were reported to be menaced from other directions.

(The British radio quoted advices from Bern that Yugoslav patriots had penetrated into Italian territory and were fighting in the port of Fiume. The broadcast, recorded by the CBS listening station, said the "entire Dalmatian coast with the ports of Susak, Ragusa and Spalato (Split) is now dominated by the Yugoslav patriots.")

The British radio described spirited fighting on Corsica and reported that French patriots held Ajaccio, west coast seaport and capital.

The broadcast said the French were receiving support from Italian troops and added that the Germans, reinforced as a result of Sardinia's evacuation, had occupied Bastia, another large city on the northeast side of the island.

Hate Fascists, Loathe Germans, Aid Invaders

By Edward Kennedy
Associated Press Staff Writer

With Allied Armies in Italy, Sept. 17 (Delayed).—Throughout southern Italy millions of Italians, hungry and forlorn, have thrown themselves on the mercy of the Allied invaders.

They say they hate the Fascists for leading Italy to ruin and loathe the Germans for mistreating them and would like to join with the Allies in chasing the Huns from the country, but there is little fighting spirit left in them.

Their main interest is getting enough to eat and getting back to the homes from which they fled and their main hope is that something will be saved in Italy to enable them to earn a living in the future.

Hordes of soldiers disarmed by the Germans wander about trying to reach their villages. They willingly help the Allies and along the coast are digging up mines laid by the Germans.

The Allied Military Government of Occupied Territories has swiftly taken charge of occupied areas and set up military governments.

Salerno is badly battered but not razed. The heaviest damage was done in a Fortress raid in June. The civil population abandoned Salerno after that. Though the city is still under German shellfire, which has destroyed many more buildings, about 5000 of the city's 50,000 population have returned from the hills.

A queue of these, chattering excitedly as shells burst along the waterfront a quarter of a mile away, are lined up for food and ration tickets underneath a window of this room.

The Germans took all the food they could lay their hands on out of Salerno. An AMG wheat ship docked yesterday and its cargo was trucked rapidly to a mill which is now grinding flour for the hungry population.

Yesterday was AMG's first real day's operation at Salerno and a great deal was done. A court was set up to try several hundred on black-market and looting charges.

A group which started counterfeiting Allied occupation money as soon as the bills appeared here also were rounded up and tried. This area in bygone years produced the world's most skillful counterfeiters and the rapidity with which the group went to work indicated that the war has not impaired their talent.

Italian-speaking American lieutenants, mostly of Italian origin and many of them lawyers, administered the courts.

The lieutenant colonel who heads the AMG here said that Italians generally were avid to cooperate. "The police are also willing to cooperate, but we found a good deal of corruption among them. We found several Carabinieri with 10 and 15 ration cards in their pockets."

New U-Boat Drive May Be on Way, Knox Says in Ulster

Londonderry, Northern Ireland, Sept. 19 (AP).—U. S. Navy Secretary Frank Knox, addressing the personnel of the American naval base here, warned today that although the German U-boat menace had been checked, the Germans were believed to be preparing new onslaughts upon Allied Atlantic convoy routes.

Secretary Knox, on an inspection tour of the U. S. installations in the European theater, was accompanied by Admiral Harold R. Stark, chief of U. S. naval operations in this theater; Capt. Leland P. Lovett, director of naval public relations, and Capt. L. S. Perry.

Sardinia Met Badoglio Order to Oust Nazis

By Wes Gallagher
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Sept. 19.—Premier Marshal Pietro Badoglio is on the Allied side of the battlelines in Italy, Allied headquarters announced today.

He gave the orders to oust the Germans from Sardinia after reaching Allied-held soil and the garrison obeyed, it was disclosed.

In agreement with Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, he also used units of the Italian fleet to held in the operation.

Badoglio has been on Allied-held Italian soil since the Germans occupied strategic points in Rome the day after his armistice proclamation on September 8.

There was no definite information available here on the details of Badoglio's escape from the Germans.

It was understood, however, he arrived by plane, giving the Germans the slip in the Florence area after Marshal Albert Kesselring, German commander in southern Italy, had seized all the airdromes south of Rome.

Badoglio, who formed an Italian government immediately after Benito Mussolini's ouster on July 25, had been reported in Allied territory several times, but today's was the first official announcement of his whereabouts.

Standley Flying to Washington

By Henry C. Cassidy

Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Sept. 19.—United States Ambassador Admiral William H. Standley left Moscow by plane for Washington today for what may have been described officially as consultations.

It is considered unlikely here, however, that the American representative will return to the Soviet Union. Admiral Standley is 71 and had not planned to spend another winter in Russia unless his presence was considered absolutely necessary.

Admiral Standley's sudden departure was made without previous announcemen in Moscow. He was host to the Diplomatic Corps, foreign military missions and correspondents at a movie at his residence yesterday, but made no reference to his departure.

He rose at dawn this morning and left from the central airport, where he was seen off by the embassy's full staff.

Maxwell M. Hamilton, former chief of the Far Eastern Department of the State Department who came to Moscow in July as embassy counselor, remained as American Charge d'Affaires.

Denials Are Hailed

Moscow, Sept. 19 (AP)—The Soviet trade union magazine War and the Working Class declared today that President Roosevelt's and Secretary of State Cordell Hull's denials of charges that the State Department was unfriendly to the Soviet Union were of "great significance."

"They demonstrated the fact that American public opinion reacts quickly to anything connected with American-Soviet relations," the magazine said.

The magazine said there "exists in American circles a great desire for friendship with the USSR and further improvement in Soviet-American relations. This is also the aim with which the people of the USSR are imbued.

Again Criticizes AMG

At the same time the magazine renewed criticism of AMG (Allied Military Government of Occupied Territories), asserting that the AMG was opposed to the principles of democracy.

Recognizing the necessity for the Allied high command to establish control over territory taken from the enemy, the magazine said, however, that "for the consolidation of victory it is necessary to attract quickly local forces capable of assisting the Allies in their struggle against the enemy."

"It is necessary to establish local organs of power on a democratic basis."

The magazine also protested the existence in New York of a White Russian newspaper "Russia," which it called the "legal conductor of false German information in the United States.

In addition to the towns seized in the new offensive against Smolensk, the Soviet high command communique listed advances in eight other sectors that liberated a total of 1200 towns and villages. The drive on Kiev freed 180 localities; on Dnieperopetrovsk, 80; Poltava, 250: the twin cities of Zaporozhe and Melitopol, 170; west and southwest of the Desna River town of Novgorod-Seversky, 100; west and southwest of Bryansk, 300; toward Roslavl, 100, and in the Kuban, 20 towns.

Gains ranging up to 18 miles were scored all along the front during the 24-hour period, indicating in some sectors the Red army engulfed three-quarters of a mile an hour in its steady westward drive.

In Saturday's fighting, the Soviet communique revealed, 33 Nazi tanks and 36 warplanes were destroyed.

Russian Prelates Greet Archbishop of York at Moscow

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Sept. 19.—The Archbishop of York, wearing a purple cassock and four-peaked miter, arrived at a Moscow airport today as the representative of the Church of England to visit the hierarchy of the Russian Orthodox Church.

A delegation of the Orthodox Church, including the long-bearded Metropolitan Nikolai of Kiev and the Archbishop Sergei of Gorky, met him at the plane in the name of the Metropolitan Sergei of Moscow, the newly elected patriarch of all Russia.

The archbishop came at the invitation of the patriarch, with whom a series of conferences was planned.

Emerging from the passenger plane in flowing robes at the central airport, the English prelate embraced the representatives of the Orthodox Church and heard an address of welcome by the Metropolitan Nikolai.

John Balfour, British Minister to the Soviet Union, also met the archbishop.

On the way to Moscow from Teheran via Astrakhan, where he stopped last night, the archbishop circled the ruins of Stalingrad. He said they were "an aweinspiring spectacle."

The visit was the latest in a series of indications of revival of the Orthodox Church, including the restoration of the synod election of a patriarch with the sanction of the Soviet government.

The archbishop arrived on the eve of a great Russian religious holiday, the Nativity of the Madonna, which will be observed Monday.

RAF Says 77% Of Hamburg Lies in Ruins

By Henry B. Jameson
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Monday, Sept. 20.—Seventy-seven per cent of sprawling Hamburg, formerly Germany's second largest city and chief port, lies in ruins as a grim and smouldering example of what is in store for Berlin and other cities when Allied air power cuts loose in its full and awful fury.

The full story of the unprecedented devastation produced in the one-time industrial center by four RAF and two American Flying Fortress raids between July 24 and August 2 at a cost of 87 bombers was disclosed by an RAF commentator today after weeks of study of photographs and intelligence reports.

They show the once-flourishing city of 1,800,000 population has, for the time being at least, almost ceased to exist.

Altogether, between 5000 and 6000 acres—about nine square miles—were devastated.

That is nearly 100 times Coventry's similarly damaged area, and nearly 60 times greater than the principal area of devastation in London (105 acres) at the peak of the German aerial attack to knock Britain from the war in 1940.

The "built up" area of Hamburg which was destroyed includes the city proper and its suburbs.

The RAF dropped approximately 7000 long tons (7840 U. S. tons) of bombs on Hamburg but the additional tonnage dumped by the Fortresses has not been revealed.

In their biggest raid on Coventry 400 German planes dropped 450 tons in nine hours—a rate of almost a ton per minute.

In the last big raid on Hamburg, the RAF dropped 2350 long tons in 45 minutes—a rate of more than 50 tons per minute, or more than 50 times the intensity of the largest Coventry raid.

The Hamburg photographs reveal an almost uniform expanse of gutted buildings. Fire swept through street after street for miles, particularly in commercial and port areas, destroying everything.

Light patches measuring up to 125 yards across dot the city, where big blockbusters leveled even big steel and concrete buildings.

The official damage list, which scrupulously includes hospitals, churches and other institutions which could not escape the holocaust, includes as "almost entirely destroyed" eight shipbuilding yards, three oil works, six nonferrous metal works, 20 armament and steel works, 11 chemical works, eight textile plants, 21 foodstuff plants, 31 miscellaneous factories, 16 gas and electric plants, 14 administrative buildings of a large Army camp, 419 warehouses, the city's main railroad station and five suburban stations.

ference for which the groundwork is reported to have been laid.

With the enormous battle for Europe just beginning to unfold on the Italian peninsula, Britons expected little information from the Prime Minister on future Allied intentions against the continent from other directions.

They looked forward, however, to learning more details of the armistice with Premier Marshal Badoglio and the events leading up to it.

It was considered likely he would reply to those who have been asking questions about the lull between the time of the overthrow of Benito Mussolini and the invasion of the mainland; why the attack was not made farther up the peninsula and why Hitler could come to the rescue of Mussolini before the Allies had laid hands on the former Italian dictator.

In the words of one commentator, Churchill had a ready-made answer to at least some of these questions.

"None could be more effective than to say that Generals Eisenhower, Alexander and Montgomery, acting in conjunction with their chiefs of staff, were the best judges of what could be done, just as they must be left to decide the venue, scale and form of the next offensive which will be directed at the heart of Germany," said the News of the World commentator.

Arrangements meanwhile were reported virtually complete for a British-United States-Russian political conference with Foreign Minister Anthony Eden for Britain, W. Averell Harriman for the United States and Foreign Commissar Vyacheslav Molotov for Russia at the table.

Italian Alpine Troops Reported In Violent Fighting With Nazis

By the Associated Press

Chiasso, on the Italian-Swiss Frontier, Sept. 19 (AP).—Italian Alpine troops in the upper Dora Balea River Basin in the extreme northwestern portion of Italy are engaged in violent fighting with the Germans, reports reaching here today said.

Fighting between Germans and Italians also was reported in central Italy, especially in the Province of Marche—the calf of the Italian boot on the Adriatic Sea.

Frontier reports said earlier rumors that the Brenner Pass, connecting link between Germany and Italy, had been sabotaged by Italians are not true. These reports added that the pass is still open.

Nazis Deserting

London, Sept. 19.—There have been a number of desertions from German positions in the Salerno area in recent days and nights, mostly Austrians, conscripted Czechs and Poles, William Munday, representing the combined American press, reported in a dispatch from the American Fifth Army today.

One German major came out onto a mountain track, however, and told a surprised Cockney patrol, "I'm fed up. I've had enough of this blankety-blank war."

Of Interest to Sweden

Stockholm, Sept. 19 (AP).—A Tass dispatch announced today that Mme. Alexandra Kollantay, Soviet envoy to Sweden, had been elevated to the rank of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary.

Her promotion led the newspaper Aftonbladet to speculate that Stockholm might become the stage for an important political conference involving Russia, perhaps to discuss postwar European political plans.

German Rewards

By the Associated Press

The Berlin radio, indirectly acknowledging the war stress on German transport, said today Adolf Hitler had bestowed honors, "shared by millions of indefatigable railwaymen," on two Reich transport officials for merritorious war service."

The broadcast said the knight's cross of the Iron Cross had been awarded to Dr. Julius Dorpmueller, Minister of Transportation, and Doctor Gangenmueller, state secretary in the Ministry of Transportation.

planes criss-crossing the Channel today said:

"They made a formidable and impressive sight to people here who remember when it was Nazi bombers coming in from the airfields of northern France that they saw."

There was no official explanation of the recent inactivity of Amercian and RAF heavy bombers, which had left the burden of the day and night assaults on Germany and Nazi-controlled territory to lighter bombers and fighters for the past two days.

American Flying Fortresses launched the new non-stop assault on September 15. The RAF swung into the attack that night, and heavy bombers returned to the assault again the next day and night.

Since then, however, the four-engined craft have remained grounded, perhaps preparing for another and even greater blow at Hitler's Europe.

Army's New Mystery Plane Ready for 'Shakedown' Flight

By Francis J. Connor
Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

The Army's secret new sky giant, the Lockheed Constellation, is ready for its first long flight, which is expected to cut three hours or more from the existing transcontinental air transport record of 11 hours and 5 minutes.

It was learned yesterday the record-seeking shakedown cruise of the mystery plane, which has undergone thorough testing in the air, will take place btween October 1 and 15, sometime between a sunset and sunrise—to keep it from public view as much as possible.

It is planned to carry as passengers on the flight 50 Army, Navy and congressional dignitaries. But who they will be are as secret as mechanical features which establish the Constellation as the fastest and safest troop and supply-carrying air transport in the world.

The Constellation will take off from the Burbank (Calif.) Airport, speed to an undisclosed field in New York for a momentary pause, and proceed to Washington, D. C., for official presentation to War Department officials.

Primarily, the flight is planned as a morale builder for war production workers and to announce to the Axis that the U. S. Army Air Forces means to rule the world in carrying supplies and reinforcements to America's embattled legions on all fighting fronts.

Howard Hughes, famed plane designer and holder of one world's transcontinental record—Los Angeles to New York in a monoplane in 7 hours and 28 minutes—and Jack Frye, president of Transcontinental and Western Air Lines, will share the controls on the flight. Hughes and Frye conceived the construction of the "Constellation" and Lockheed engineers perfected it.

Only three "Constellations," it was disclosed, have been produced thus far. In due time, however, the remainder of a pre-Pearl Harbor order for 40 placed by TWA will roll off Lockheed production lines. Then the Army will order them in quantities to fill its needs.

Designed to carry heavy loads fast over great distances, performance details of the plane are restricted by the Army, but it can be told that its average cruising speed at sea level is 225 miles an hour and 300 miles an hour at 20,000 feet. Above that height, its four 2000 horsepower engines hurtle it along at astounding speed.

Since 1935 the transcontinental transport plane record has stood at 11 hours 5 minutes elapsed time, result of a two-engined plane hustling at an average speed of 221 miles per hour. Informed sources say the Constellation will cross the country in eight hours or less, will fly to London from New York.

The Constellation wing, spread to 123 feet, is patterned after the wing of the P-38 fighter plane. With full load, the plane uses one gallon of gasoline per mile and, despite its high speed, can land in limited space at "automobile" speed.

The plane is designed to carry 55 pasengers and a crew of nine.

Probe Likely On Marshall Ouster Talk

By Horace M. Coats
International News Service Staff Writer

Inquiry by the House Military Affairs Committee into charges that "powerful interests" are seeking ouster of Gen. George C. Marshall as Army Chief of Staff was considered likely last night.

High-ranking members of the committee asserted the reported "promotion" of General Marshall to be chief of the Allied invasion of Europe in all probability will be discussed at a meeting today.

Publication of the charge in the Army and Navy Journal resulted in a flock of rumors connected with the alleged ouster move.

The uproar created additional interest in view of the recent reappointment of Marshall by President Roosevelt for an indefinite term as chief of staff.

Harness Amazed

Representative Forest A. Harness (Republican) of Indiana, member of the Military Affairs Committee, expressed amazement over the report.

"It would be terribly disturbing to me if General Marshall is not retained as Chief of Staff," Harness said. "I am inclined to believe the reports will be a topic of discussion in the committee's meeting tomorrow."

Reports were circulated yesterday that Gen. John J. Pershing, chief of American Expeditionary Forces in World War I, would be a White House visitor during the coming week to protest the reported "promotion" of Marshall.

Some reports went as far as to say that Marshall already has been relieved of the Chief of Staff post and the only question remaining was selection of his successor. Most frequently mentioned to succeed to Marshall's post was Lieut. Gen. Brehon Somervell, commanding general of the Army Service Forces.

Field Marshal Move

Senator Styles Bridges (Republican) New Hampshire, high ranking member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, said that in his opinion Marshall's opinions carried more weight in Congress than those of any other Army officer.

Prior to the summer recess steps were under way in Congress to create the rank of field marshal for Marshall.

Such a move would have given him a rank equal to that of military negotiators above the rank of general in the other Allied armies.

Farm Leader Calls for Billion-Dollar War Food Loan

Inadequate financing and equipment and "freezing" of farm labor have created in agriculture, through no fault of the farmer, "the most glaring of wartime waste of manpower," James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers Union, said yesterday.

"Farm manpower," he said in a formal statement, "is being wasted in two ways: (1) Approximately 1,300,000 farm families are prevented by underfinancing, underequipment and consequent underemployment from producing war foods at maximum; (2) Farm labor, frozen in most of 3000 counties under the provisions of public law 45 which require approval of the county agent before Federal funds are used in recruiting and transporting farm labor from State to State, is short in many areas and is surplus in others."

Patton suggested a billion-dollar loan authorization "to step up war food production by farm families who, through no fault of their own, and contrary to their wishes and patriotic desires, are now producing far below their potential maximum capacity."

Nearby Farm Labor Need Is Desperate

By Elsie Carper
Post Staff Writer

"There won't be much food in Washington stores by January unless workers volunteer to help harvest crops now ripening on nearby farmlands," said Moreland L. Medlin, manager of the War Food Administration's work camp at Timberville, Va.

A tour of orchards, farms and labor camps in the area found a desperate need of help to bring in the crops. An example was the case of a Berryville employer who in former years had hired over a thousand workers to help harvest his apple crop and has only forty workers this year. In one packing shed alone, ninety-six workers will be needed by October 1.

John Jones, USES farm recruiting officer, is urging workers, particularly Government employes who can spend several days or more in harvesting work, to sign up as "volunteer farmers" at the District Employment Center, 501 K st. nw., or at the Center's booth at the "Back the Attack" show on the Washington Monument Grounds.

Jones explained that the adequate supply of migratory workers obtainable in former years has been almost completely depleted by the demands of the military services and the generally short labor market.

Visiting two labor camps in the Shenandoah Valley, one at Timberville, sponsored by the War Food Administration, and another at Castleman's Ferry, a cooperative group camp for men and boys, volunteer workers were found boasting about their blisters, aches and pains and glad to be helping out in what they considered actual war work.

"Of course it isn't all play," said Marjorie Olson, 20, of 1017 17th st. nw., a Navy Department stenographer who had spent the day cutting corn. "We're here to bring in the crops and we are putting in ten hours a day. But we are doing some good and like the change. Tell the people to leave their tennis rasquets at home, bring their oldest clothes, and come on out."

At the Timberville camp, where both men and women are working, the volunteers are paid 30 cents an hour. They are housed in tents with wooden floors and are furnished blankets and cots by the WFA. A registered nurse and a doctor are always in attendance.

At Castleman's Ferry, supervised by the Virginia Extension Association, the campers are paid to pick the apple crop and to work in the packing sheds. Each pays $1.25 a day for room and board, and receives 40 cents an hour for work in the sheds, and 8 cents a bushel for apples.

At present, tomatoes are ripe for picking and canning corn must be cut and stacked and poultry processed for the market. There also is a demand for laborers to harvest the apple crop, which is approaching the peak of its season, and to work in the packing sheds.

"I was going to New York for my vacation when I heard about the crop corps and I came up here to help out," said Avril Johnson, 19, of Barton Hall, a calculator with the Navy Department. "It's the only way to spend a vacation, particularly during the war years."

Others volunteering their efforts included Clifton Barnes, 4104 N. Henderson rd., Arlington; J. L. Talbert, 1527 28th st. se., both of Agriculture Department; Walter Smith, 5609 Chevy Chae Parkway, employed by the Washington Gas Light Co.; Doris Osborn, 1650 Fuller st. nw., with the Navy Department; Wallace L. Kadderly, 1800 N. Edgewood rd., Arlington, director of the Agriculture Department's portion of the Farm and Home Hour, and Harold R. Bond, 1415 Gappin st. nw., with the Postoffice.

Serious Shortage of Beef by Spring Forecast

By Charlotte Ingalls
Associated Press Staff Writer

Chicago, Sept. 19.—Reiterating that a serious beef shortage still is "in the making," the livestock and meat council declared today "ours will be a beef hungry Nation by spring or before—faster than many people seem to realize."

After a meeting of its executive committee, composed of leading packers and livestock producer groups, the council issued a statement that the situation "will become increasingly worse unless quick remedial steps are taken."

"The shortages threaten to be even more acute than during last spring, when beef disappeared from markets in many parts of the country," it asserted.

Cattle authorities at the Chicago stockyards declared while there would be no "beef famine," the big influx of beef which had been expected by some would probably not materialize.

Due to the feed shortages, range-fed cattle had been expected to be shipped directly instead of to feeders for fattening, but cattlemen say reports from some areas now are cattle will be held for further grass feeding.

Grass feeding takes from one to two years to put stock in condition for slaughtering, while calves can be converted into prime beeves in from three to six months after being put on the corn diet.

Cattlemen added that grass feeding "will not produce the quality beef relished by a people accustomed to a high standard of living."

The council estimates shipments of feeder cattle into the eight Corn Belt States in August are 10 per cent lower than those for that month a year ago.

"Millions of pounds of meat already have been lost to the Natoin, and it may soon be too late to save even a portion of the finished beef we shall need in the coming year," the council said.

New York, Sept. 19 (AP).—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia said today Price Administrator Prentiss Brown had approved his plan, to be applied throughout the country immediately, to have all meat identified and priced "from the source right down to the butcher shop."

He said in his weekly broadcast over station WNYC that under the plan every person shipping meat by freight, truck or other means would be obliged to include a description of each item and manifest showing seller's name, quantity, grade, weight and price charged.

"We'll have the power to act when meat comes to this city to confiscate and seize the meat if it does not have a manifest," the mayor said. "Then if a retailer charges over the ceiling prices, he will have to explain in court."

LaGuardia said he would "give everybody a chance" to prepare for compliance.

20 Union Soldiers Answer Roll Call

Milwaukee, Sept. 19 (AP).—When the roll call of the Grand Army of the Republic was read this afternoon to open the 78th annual convention, only 20 men who marched with Lincoln's hosts could rise and answer "Here."

National Commander John S. Dumser, 96, of Oakland, Calif., called the Union veterans of the War Between the States to order in the formal opening of a scheduled five-day convention—what may prove to be the final gathering, since delegates will vote later in the week on suggested suspension of further meetings, at least for the duration.

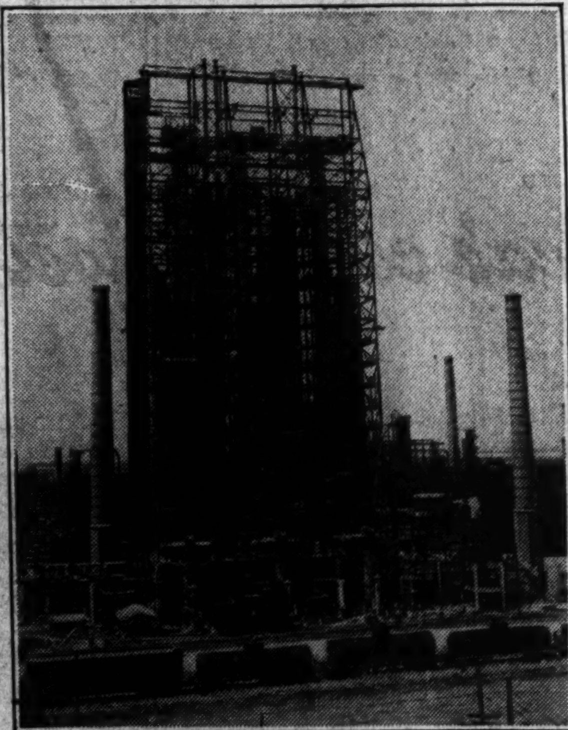
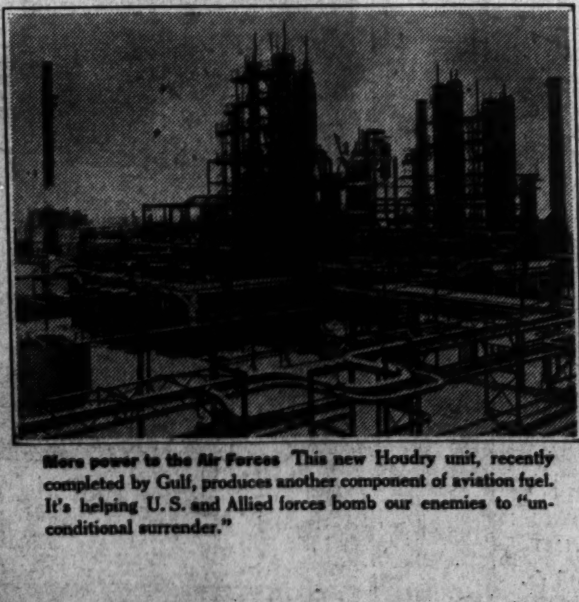
We hope this battle report gets to the front!

Here's where they make the "Boom!" This Gulf unit makes toluene. Toluene makes TNT. And TNT, when placed in a shell and fired from an American cannon, makes a loud "Boom!" that heralds the downfall of America's enemies.



Another Blow for Hitler and Tojo! This is a new Thermofor catalytic cracking unit built by Gulf . . . to turn out high octane aviation grade gasoline for Allied fighters and bombers. What's more, it makes feed stock for the synthetic rubber plants, too!



More power to the Air Forces This new Houdry unit, recently completed by Gulf, produces another component of aviation fuel. It's helping U. S. and Allied forces bomb our enemies to "unconditional surrender."

NOT MANY DAYS from now the giant butadiene plant for making synthetic rubber at Port Neches, Texas, will be going full blast.

The story of this plant ought to make mighty cheerful reading for our fighting men.

For it's more than the story of a battle fought and won—the battle to get the rubber we must have to fight this War.

It's a cracking good illustration of how Americans at home are backing up Americans at the front. It shows how the folks at home can get together, and by drive, ingenuity, co-operation, and an incredible amount of plain hard work, take the toughest problems this War can hand out—and lick 'em to a standstill.

12 months ago, this butadiene plant . . . the biggest in the world . . . was on the drafting board. By the end of this year, it will be turning out synthetic rubber ingredients at the rate of 100,000 tons annually.

Certainly, the story of how five of the country's great oil companies worked as one to help design, build, and operate the Port Neches plant, is as heart-warming a tale as any that has come from the Home Front in this War.

But there are others

Besides producing the vast amount of oil needed for our mechanized forces, our Navy, our gigantic war industry and our essential civilian use, the oil industry has tackled—successfully—two huge additional jobs:

1. The production of high-octane gasoline for our young giant of an air force;
2. The production of toluene for explosives.

Supplying rubber for the wheels of our war machine—high-octane gasoline for its wings—explosives for its shells . . . can you think of three jobs more vital to victory?

As the Port Neches plant and the pictures on this page prove, all three jobs are being done—and well done. And for the part Gulf is privileged to play in the doing of them, we are both thankful and proud.

Two young Negro women were injured, one seriously, in the explosion of a hot water furnace yesterday afternoon in the basement of the three-story brick Aristocrat Hotel, 1125 10th st. nw.

The injured, police reported, were Mrs. Doris Callendar, 22, who suffered second-degree burns, a broken left ankle and cuts, and her sister, Rosetta Gillespie, 25, who suffered burns to shoulders and arms and a scalp cut. The latter left Freedmen's Hospital after treatment, but Mrs. Callendar was admitted.

The victims lived in the basement where the explosion shattered brick partitions.

"If a fire ever started in one of them," he said, "I don't know how the patients would ever be saved."

While Holman was inspecting the kitchen and pantry, Senator Bushfield questioned Dr. Bocock regarding the administrative and management details of the institution. He would not reveal his findings.

Generally Clean

Senator Buck, on the other hand, who toured the main tuberculosis building, said he found it was greatly understaffed, but generally clean.

"There was only one nurse to take care of four floors of the building," he remarked.

"Conditions seemed fairly good and the untidiness I observed seemed to be due to individuals. However, with more orderlies and nurses this would not exist."

In the institution's kitchen the Senators seemed quite disturbed. Senator Bushfield called attention of the others to several cockroaches he found crawling over a work board.

Thick, Dirty Grease

Thick, dirty grease was visible on the cook stoves, a pot of soup was boiling without a cover on it and several open containers of bread were seen. All of the water spigots leaked badly.

The floors, apparently scrubbed down after the last meal, were wet with evidence of slime in the corners. Dirty, soapy water still remained in spots.

A deep vat of grease used for frying was heavily coated with fat and was uncovered. A large cooking pot had the remnants of the spaghetti cooked in it hanging over its edges and was filled to overflowing with dirty water.

Diet Kitchen Clean

A special diet kitchen off to one side was clean and orderly.

Dr. Bocock explained to the group that the kitchen, installed in 1929, was designed to serve food for 1500 persons daily.

"We now have to prepare and serve 4800 meals," he declared. "That's three times more than our equipment was made for."

Senator Holman said yesterday's trip was only the beginning of the subcommittee's investigation.

"We are just taking a preliminary look, preparing a chart of operation," he said. "During the next few days we expect to make several other visits., probably singly, and at the end will have a conference and prepare our report."

D. C. Marines Like Laundry Service On Guadalcanal

If you're in a hurry with your laundry, wash it yourself—or join the Marines on Guadalcanal.

Used to Washington laundry service, Sergt. William H. Burnett, USMC, a Post sports writer before becoming a combat correspondent, and Staff Sergt. Russell S. Anderson, USMC, who used to be with the OWI motion picture division here, were much surprised to find practically overnight service on the Pacific island.

Arriving there a short time ago, they found a native to wash an accumulation of dirty clothes for them. "Take much time," he warned them, when he saw the large bundle.

Sergeant Burnett, thinking of the ten-day wait—and better—he had to put up with back home, sighed.

The laundry was back in two days.

BETTE BLUE TO "400." Remember Bette Blue, the junior Kate Smith who used to give out double-dyed indigo with the late great Bunny Berrigan's band? She made "Blue Prelude," her theme song, one of the most popular recordings ever. Bette opens at Restaurant "400" tonight. So, if you're in the mood indigo—here's the opportunity of a lifetime. P. S. Bette's combining romance and finance in her Washington engagement. Her husband is a doctor at the Naval Hospital.

Durward Bowersox, superb violinist at Bart's Trans-Lux, will open in the Dubonnet Room as leader of a new Meyer Davis band on September 29. . . . Sasha Lucas, Troika's former maestro, will soon open his own spot—probably on Connecticut ave. Roger Kay, a polished pianist, is Troika's new leader.

BEA HOWELL, that glowing young creature whom you've heard sing with Harry James, Phil Spitalny, Jack Teagarden and Tony Pastor, will open at Olmsted's Club tonight. They say she's even better in a bistro than on the stage or radio. New tonight, too, is Hal Yates, singing pianist who's given command performances for the Kings of England and Sweden. Eileen Cook (nifty, naughty and nice) stays over. So does that smart pianist, Harold Fonville. N. B. You'll be tickled that Nancy Noland will be coming back to Washington's Stork Club (meaning Olmsted's, naturally) for a six-week stay later in the fall.

A SHOWER OF ORCHESTRAS will fall like comets upon the local scene this Wednesday. On that fateful night Carmen Cavallero will open in the Statler's Embassy Room, Del Courtney will breeze into the Del Rio, and Louis Belancourt will rumba into Milt Barrett's La Conga. Beating the visiting bands' time by one day will be a new all-Washington band, the Felix Zimmer orchestra, that will make its bow at Paul Young's opening tomorrow night.

Little Jack Little is now playing piano all over the South Pacific for our fighting men, but he'll be coming back to El Patio in a coupla months when Adrian Rollini's contracts call him Manhattanward.

OWEN AND PARKER

NEPTUNERY. Kay Arden has the Coast Guard well under control in the Neptune Room . . . Maestro Henry Daye will be back next Saturday. His appendectomy's all zippered up nicely, thanks . . . Drummer Nat Lewis is whanging out tympani solos that are hottern'n torpedos . . . Ditto for the vibraphone voltage of Hank Lapidus.

WHIRLING MUSICIANS. Until a few weeks ago it was always the draft that made changes in bands. But now everyone has taken to hiring musicians from everyone (or anyone) else. Myles Hallett of Cafe Caprice has recruited from Jose Morand's band (formerly at Carlton), the Statler's Bob Knight grabbed one of Myles' boys, Bill Strickland of the Lotus has annexed lads from Carr van Sickler at the Madrillon, Carr has found some youthful but smart talent hitherto unseen in the niteries, the Crossroads' Ralph Hawkins swooped down like a genial hawk on Restaurant "400" and grabbed Frank Oxley . . . You'll see the same music makers' faces around, but on different bandstands.

OPA Laundry Price Boost Ruling Awaited

The Office of Price Administration this week is expected to decide whether District laundries shall be allowed a price increase to offset wage raises approved by the regional War Labor Board.

A decision on the matter is expected before Saturday, though the laundries are not bound to charge higher rates even when granted permission to do so.

Increases in salaries with a minimum rate of 40 cents an hour and time and one-half pay for all work over 40 hours a week were approved Saturday, and the announcement immediately wrung a protest from the Laundry Dry Cleaning Owners Association, the group which filed petitions for the individual concerns.

"Forced Play" Charged

The association's executive secretary, George Walker, declared that the wage increases would not go into effect until after OPA acts and charged that WLB was "trying to force" the increase beforehand:

The association secretary said his organization originally informed WLB the wage increases could not be put into effect until after laundries are permitted a price rise.

"We resent this type of governmental operation," he said.

Normal Procedure

In the meantime, a WLB spokesman last night explained that the release of WLB's approval was a "normal procedure," and that the board "never waits for the OPA to act in these cases."

"If WLB approves a wage increase," the spokesman asserted, "the fact is made known to the public and OPA is then left to act as it sees fit."

Approval for the raises from Economic Stabilization Director Fred L. Vinson is not believed necessary by the laundry association. It was pointed out that because of the critical labor situation in the laundry industry, prior approval for wage and price adjustments had been given.

Under the terms of the WLB order the following wage rates were allowed: Workers now receiving 33 to 35 cents an hour may be increased to 40; those receiving 36 to 50 cents an hour may receive a 5-cent hourly raise; those receiving 51 to 60 cents, a 4-cent hourly increase; those receiving 61 to 70 cents, a 3-cent hourly increase and those receiving 71 to 75 cents, a 1½-cent hourly increase.

75-Cent Limit

Employes receiving more than 75 cents an hour in the affected laundries may not receive an increase, the WLB ruled.

In the event that OPA refuses to grant the laundry price increase, the WLB regional wage stabilization director informed Walker, the WLB ruling would not stand. Laundries, however, are at liberty to put the wage increase into effect if they desire, it was said.

The laundries affected are Old Colony, Yale, Quality and Service, Bell, Franklin, Dupont, Elite, Banner, West End, Tolman, Bergmann's, Home, Page, Morningside, Colonial, Mayfair, Arcade-Sunshine, Carroll's, Manhattan and Conger's.

Humbled Publicity Man Learns We Have No Mayor, After All

About a week ago, The Post received a telegram from New York city saying "the Mayor of Washington" would appear on a "Mayor of our Town" radio program to ask full cooperation in the fat-salvage drive. Provided with this information by Director of Information Alexander Williams, the reporting staff of this paper looked high and low for Washington's Mayor but found no elected official of any sort in this District.

Yesterday The Post learned its search was not entirely in vain. The following letter was addressed to the city staff:

"My most humble apologies go to you and to the outraged citizenry of the District of Columbia for the inepititude and general ignorance which resulted in my trampling on the tenderest political bunions by my 'dogged hunt for Washington's mayor.' My exposure as a 'promotion expert' on the payroll of the Fat Salvage Committee was no more than I deserved under the circumstances.

"In extenuation of my nefarious conduct, I arise, battered, out of the night that covered me, to explain that inasmuch as I was born into political disenfranchisement, which is to say in Washington, D. C., and misspent most of my youth in that fair though enslaved community, it was not until your article shed the fierce white light of pitiless journalistic satire upon me that I realized that all these years I had gone through life never suspecting that I was not politically whole and complete, like other men. Who knows, perhaps there are thousands of native Washingtonians as happy in their ignorance as I was. Where, oh where, has the Sun tradition gone? Could not The Post have run a kindly editorial, 'Yes, Alexander, there IS a mayor.'

"Anyway, gentlemen, we of the Fat Salvage Committees all over the country thank you for helping the drive, and Bernard Towell, who is Uncle Sammie's own, thanks you too. Please keep up the good work you have been doing with the charming matrons of the District and continue to tell them how urgent is the need to salvage waste fats for munitions and medicines. Sincerely,

"ALEXANDER WILLIAMS,
"Director of Information."

Ration Book 4 Designed for 2 Years' Use

War ration book four, for use beginning in November and designed to last at least two years, was explained yesterday by the Office of Price Administration.

The new book, to be issued at a Nation-wide schoolhouse registration the last 10 days of October, will combine point and unit stamps. There will be 384 stamps, printed in blue, red, green and black.

The red and blue stamps will be used in conjunction with red and blue tokens, to be introduced early in 1944 and given as change in stamp expenditures for meat, dairy products and processed foods.

The green stamps will be used on an "interim basis with blue processed food stamps, much in the manner the brown stamps of book three are now being used in the meats-fats program.

Twelve of 96 unit stamps, printed in black, are designated for sugar. The same number are marked for coffee, which no longer is rationed. These and 72 others marked "spares" will be reserved for any additional foods rationed, OPA said.

Nurses' Aides Call Issued

An appeal for daytime nurses' aides for duty in local hospitals and for volunteers to care for children in the Day Nursery was issued by the District Red Cross yesterday.

Classes for the training of women volunteers for nursing service will begin next Monday, Mrs. Hugh S. Rowan, chairman of the D. C. Red Cross Nurses' Aid Corps, announced.

Interviews for prospective volunteers are taking place on the second floor of the Walsh House, 2020 Massachusetts ave. nw., on Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays from 9 a. m. to noon.

Trainees will attend classes Monday through Friday for a minimum of six weeks. Beginning September 27, classes will be held from 2 p. m. to 4 p. m.; beginning October 18 from 10 a. m. to noon and beginning November 8 classes again will be held during the afternoon hours.

Requirements for the nursing course are a high school education, good health and sufficient spare time during the day to complete training.

Mrs. Leslie Bratton, chairman of the Red Cross Army and Navy Auxiliaries, appealed for volunteers to look after the children of servicemen at the day nursery.

The nursery, she explained, provides day-time care for the children of enlisted men whose wives are working and is operated entirely on a volunteer basis.

Aides in the nursery are needed especially between 2 and 5 p. m., Mrs. Bratton said, requesting that volunteers telephone Republic 8300, extension 558.

SULFA DRUG COMPOUND BRINGS BATTLE FRONT MIRACLES TO HOMEFRONT

Skin Sufferers Receive New Hope For Painful, Embarrassing Skin Ailments

SULFANILAMIDE was discovered by mistake during the process of developing color-fast dyes, but it was almost 30 years later that chemists discovered its phenomenal power to destroy bacteria. Much has been written about the success of the Sulfa drugs in treatment of pneumonia, scarlet fever, peritonitis and streptoccic throat infections. More recently, news from the battlefronts of the world reach here of the high percentage of lives saved. Wounds on the battlefront can be treated with Sulfa drugs, and the injured men moved back to field hospitals for proper medical care without danger of infection.

Probably one of the most outstanding derivatives of the Sulfa drug, the one which offers relief to the greatest number here on the homefront, the one which can be used safely in every household is Nu-Basic Sulfa Drug Compound; PSO-RIDISAL for the relief of painful, embarassing and stubborn skin diseases.

Clinical tests and thousands of users credit this compound with as dramatic results as those of other Sulfa derivatives . . . particularly with stubborn and long-standing cases of PSORIASIS—an unsightly skin disease that appears on the face, scalp, arms, elbows, hands, fingers, nails, legs, knees and torso.

Similarly amazing results have been attested to by those who suffer with ATHLETE'S FOOT, IMPETIGO, DANDRUFF and ECZEMA.

PSO-RIDISAL is a liquid compound for external use . . . is safe, simple, clean to use. Just rub it on. Each bottle is uniform through laboratory control . . . and is sold only on absolute 14 day money-back guarantee.

If you suffer from an aggravating skin condition you at least owe yourself a test trial with this miracle SULFA DRUG COMPOUND: PSO-RIDISAL But before you order send for our unusually informative booklet describing the treatment and giving you the facts about results. Send 5c in stamps to cover mailing. Nu-Basic Product Co., Dept. E-32, Royal Oak, Mich.

The Film Industry Goes To Town On Bond Drive

TRUE TO THE TRADITIONS of "show business," the motion picture industry is compiling an impressive record in the Third War Loan drive.

CLAUDETTE COLBERT

For the opening day of the drive, Loew's Theaters reported total bond sales of $2,193,030, which in the first four days mounted to an even four million dollars. Ranger Chairman George J. Schaefer in the same period reported wires on three sets of figures—Earl Hudson's $3,075,000 in Detroit, Ed Beatty's $1,000,000 from the same city, and $2,000,000 from the New England area.

The total amount of bond sales at rallies in New York City theaters on Wednesday, September 8 was $4,820,000.

On Thursday, September 9, in Philadelphia, the Hollywood Star Caravan that opened its tour in Washington the day before the official opening of the drive, helped to raise $72,967,000, with another million in bonds accounted for at the bond premiere of "Best Foot Forward." In Boston, on Friday, sales totaled $100,000,000, and in New York, on Saturday, 22,000 persons purchased $152,966,625 of the war issues at the star rally in Madison Square Garden. In Pittsburgh, a grand total of $80,000,000; Cleveland, $143,000,000.

In summary, this Hollywood Cavalcade in the first four stops on its 14-city junket topped $500,000,000, with every promise that by the end of the tour it will have gone well over its goal of $1,400,000,000.

These figures, of course, spring principally from metropolitan areas. Proportionate activity is being reported from the lesser communities served by the 16,000-odd motion picture theaters in operation throughout the land. Just as in the Washington territory, for example.

The war bond premiere of "For Whom the Bell Tolls" out of the way—and netting well in excess of a million dollars in bond sales at Loew's Palace Wednesday night—the contagion is spreading to the outlying precincts. Plans of Sidney Lust and Henry Hiser, in nearby Maryland, already have been outlined here.

Comes word now from John J. Payette and Carter T. Barron, cochairmen of the District of Columbia War Activities Committee, that eight Warner Brothers theaters in the Washington outlying area will give war bond premieres within the month—in Maryland, the Academy Theater, Hagerstown, on September 30, with "Thank Your Lucky Stars," booked as the next attraction at the Earle incidentally; the Opera House, in Frederick, October 3, with "Best Foot Forward."

In Virginia, the Capitol, Winchester, "Thank Your Lucky Stars," October 3; Dixie Theater, Staunton, "Wixie" on September 30; State Theater, Lexington, "So Proudly We Hail," September 29, and the Virginia Theater, Harrisonburg, with "Thank Your Lucky Stars" on October 1.

The Warners' Arcade Theater in Waynesboro, Pa., will bond premiere "Best Foot Forward," on October 1, and the Apollo, Martinsburg, W. Va., "Hit the Ice," on October 3.

That's the way "show business" is in there swinging all over the country.

Some Very Neat Goings-On

That new stage bill that Managing Director Gene Ford has hitched up to the second week of the anniversary engagement of "So Proudly We Hail," on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater, is an exceedingly de luxe bit of entertainment.

The stress of the times being what it is, we didn't get around to catching the living segment of the current program until Saturday afternoon and then congratulated ourself upon having resisted the temptation to skip it on a theoretical "day off."

Following Art Brown's exercise of the audience's vocal cords, the business gets under way with "Ring Up the Curtain," sung from behind same, where Sam Jack Kaufman's orchestra is hiding. Comes then Enrica and Novello, two of the most accomplished dancers recently seen on this or any other stage. Mr. Novello has devised new and unique means of tossing Miss Enrica around and about and up and over, from floor to hip, to shoulder and back again, to all of which Miss Enrica submits with more grace than anyone else within easy memory.

In Arthur Blake, making his first appearance in the Capital, Mr. Ford has unearthed a character impressionist who carries the matter a little farther than any of the others. The personable Mr. Blake assumes the movements, mannerism and gestures of his subjects as well as their vocal idiosyncrasies. Not all of them are perfect, but his impersonations of Lionel Barrymore, Jimmy Stewart, Katharine Hepburn, Bette Davis and several more struck me as being immediately recognizable caricatures of the originals.

And then on a three-tiered stage, the orchestra, that incomparable wizardress of the keyboard, Evalyn Tyner—with Burrus Williams in there on his piano, too—and Lynn Allison, making minor classics of "Begin the Beguine," "Siboney" and "La Malaguena."

Claudette Colbert, Paulette Goddard and Veronica Lake would be proud of the embellishment that has been accorded their picture.

Tonight on the Willard Roof will set in motion the final two weeks of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," most durable of all the temperance dramas. Dick Midgely and his players have enjoyed a record season atop the midtown hostelry. Since Monday, June 7, when "Bertha, the Sewing-Machine Girl," touched things off, the "Gay Nineties Music Hall" has played to the imposing total of 45,000 customers. And still two weeks to go. Apparently audiences haven't changed as much in the last 50 years or so as some seem to think. Or maybe it is merely that Grandpa knew best!

The "Boxoffice Champions" for August, on the basis of where the public spent its money, were "Background to Danger"—and how did that one ever get up there?—"Dixie," "DuBarry Was a Lady," "Hit the Ice," "The Constant Nymph" and "This Is the Army." Three for Warner Brothers and one each for Paramount, M-G-M and Universal. "This Is the Army" also was voted the Boxoffice Blue Ribbon Award for August by the National Screen Council.

Voice-from-the-Back-of-the-Hall Note

Engrossing Bill at Trans-Lux

Arresting events and renowned personalities dominate the news section of the new bill at the Trans-Lux Theater.

President Roosevelt watches a demonstration of the famous "bazooka" gun from his car and must have been impressed by the tremendous fire-power of a weapon so easily handled by one man. Secretary Hull outlines American foreign policy and Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, foremost ace of World War I, is as enthusiastically greeted by the boys at an English bomber base as he greets them.

Getting away from the war, Miss America of 1943 is chosen at Atlantic City's annual September beauty pageant and seems to have deserved the distinction.

Other clips show the Yanks in their Flying Fortresses taking off at dawn to shatter a Nazi plane repair base in France: the Grumman Hellcat, the Navy's answer to the Jap Zero plane: the fire-ravaged Broad Street Station, in Philadelphia: WAC's and Army Nurses' fashion show, etc., etc., around the world.

Topping the short subjects is "Bill Jack vs. Adolph Hitler," the March of Time's issue devoted to the Utopian defense plant operated by Bill Jack and Ralph Heintz in Cleveland, Ohio, where there are no time clocks, no strikes, and no absenteeism; not even employes—only "associates." Free meals, music while they work, free vitamin tablets, steam rooms and the other innovations have resulted in both Army and Navy "E's" for the plant. The film is an eye-opener.

In addition, Grantland Rice chips in with another "Sportlight," in "Amphibious Fighters," and "Any Chickens Today" will set your laughter cackling.

"He Can't Make It Stick," a "Color Rhapsody" writes the period to a high-voltage bill.

YOU AIN'T

OWEN MURPHY, JR., whose pugnacious countenance gained national fame as the subject of the above "What-d'ya-mean-you-ain't-gonna-buy-no-bonds?" Treasury poster, seems not quite so displeased in the arms of Carole Landis, Twentieth Century-Fox star, at the opening of the Third War Loan drive in the Astor Hotel, New York. Who would?

HEDDA HOPPER

Joan Picks Her Man

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 19—Joan Crawford was on the Gershwin set watching Bob Alda work, hoping to get him for her leading man in "Never Goodbye." . . . Our Hollywood cavalcade show touring for bonds is expected to sell a billion and half dollars' worth, and it's well on its way. It's Betty Hutton and Mickey Rooney who shiver the timbers. . . . If Franchot Tone can tear himself away from the baby, he'll play the killer in "The Phantom Lady." . . . Charles B. Taft arrives here next week to talk on youth delinquency, and maybe talk our folks into making a picture about it. . . . Veronica Lake chaperoned by the Ralph Blums, pulls out for New York September 26. . . . Unusual casting—Barbara Stanwyck and Fred MacMurray play heavies for the first time in "Double Indemnity," while heavy Edward G. Robinson is the hero.

JOAN CRAWFORD

And They Love It

Evalyn Walsh McLean is the most interesting woman visitor we've had in these parts for many years. She speaks her mind, asks leading questions, and talks straight to our leading producers. When she visited Irene Dunne on the "White Cliffs of Dover" set, she turned to the workers and said, "You're the ones I really want to know. Without you, there'd be no pictures." And before she leaves, she's going to throw a picnic for the grips, camera boys, painters—in other words, the little folks. And maybe, just maybe, Hollywood will take the hint and open up those big estates.

Dancing, But Not in Dark

Louis B. Mayer didn't waste time at El Morocco. When he saw a young blond giant named Henry Daniels dancing, he signed him. He's a former tennis player. The night I was there I listened to Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Fanny Ward, and Tommy Manville. At New York's Algonquin, I asked Harold Ross whether he'd do the lead in James Thurber's play about the New Yorker magazine. Harold replied, "What? With my ulcers, and all the trouble I've got running the magazine—or didn't you know we were unessential?" . . . Martha Hodge, at the same place, is excited about getting De Bois to do sets for "Penelope," which will star Lili Darvis, Estelle Winwood, Philip Merivale, and Dean Jagger. Dean is romancing around New York with Doris Nolan of "The Doughgirls." . . . Not a pleasant sight—a taxi driver bawling out an Army lieutenant when the taxi cut in front of him and the lieutenant remonstrated. My Irish driver whispered, "That such things could happen in this beautiful country!"

A "Field Day"

Anna Rosenberg of the New York Social Security and Manpower Board will like the story Virginia Van Upp is writing about the school kids who are harvesting fruit and vegetables up in Oregon. Anna told me the difficulty she had getting people to harvest the crop. She got soldiers on 72-hour leave, schoolgirls, social workers, etc. But in Buffalo they wanted a picture of her and a Junior League girl picking beans. She reluctantly consented and started picking. Picture was snapped, she continued to the end of the row—couldn't straighten up, neither could Junior Leaguer, who said, "I'll just continue down like this the rest of the day and get myself an osteopath so I can come back tomorrow."

The Great Lover

Charles Boyer has been added to "Three Cheers for the Boys" with Marlene Dietrich, George Raft, and Vera Zorina. As soon as Boyer finishes that, he'll star in and produce "That Night With You."

Karloff Scores Hit at the Pix

"The Black Room" now playing at the Pix Theater, is a photoplay of slow, creeping, cumulative horror. It tells a fantastic but logical story of the fulfillment of a dreadful old superstition.

A noble Russian family has the motto, "I shall end as I began." This refers to the fact that the founders of the family had been twins, the younger of whom killed the elder, in a room of their castle known as the "Black Room" because of its onyx walls. Prophecy has it that just so will the family die out—the two members will be twins, and the younger will kill the elder in the black room.

As the film begins, twins have just been born in this family, to the great distress of their father, who believes the old tale. By a clever transition device, they grow to maturity within sixty screen seconds, and the story proceeds to establish that the younger, who, according to legend, will be a murderer, has grown up a good and wise man, and the elder a scoundrel who deserves his predicted fate.

Boris Karloff plays both twins, and it is a brilliant performance.

With polished irony the story moves inexorably toward its finish, all the characters' efforts to avoid their destiny only bringing them closer to it. But despite the fact that the conclusion is foregone, the manner of its happening is unforeseeable, and so the suspense never slackens.

Though it is largely a one-man show, Mr. Karloff's supporting cast gives a good account of itself. Background music is interesting and moody.

The other picture on the double bill, "Kidnapping Gorillas," combines some interesting pictures of wild life, marred by a smirking commentary, with an interpolated sequence of such sordid sensationalism it does not even deserve adverse comment.

Gossip From Gotham

New York, Sept. 19.

Last week, when all the stars in the Hollywood War Bond Cavalcade went to the St. Mortiz after their show at Madison Square Garden, a crowd of autograph-hunters gathered in front of the hotel. They tried to gain entrance to the stars' rooms, without success . . . One lady, however, sent up a note, then was rushed upstairs—and she returned with the autographs of Greer Garson, Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Kay Kyser, etc. . . . "How'd you do it?" she was asked. "How'd you ever get 'em to allow you to go up?" . . . "Oh, it was easy," she shrugged. "All I did was to send up a note to Kyser, saying I was applying for a maid's job."

At the Chez Paree, Harry Richman watched such a trio work. "You were swell tonight," they told Harry . . . "Yes," he replied, "and your phonograph needle was swell tonight, too" . . . In order to make possible the engagement of this trio, the Chez Paree had to convert its electricity curren from A. C. to D. C.

When the Jack Benny-Larry Adler troupe made their first stop-off on their journey to Africa and points beyond, the commanding officer watched their performance for the troops and noticed the pleasing reception. He thereupon sent coded messages to the commanding officers all along the route, advising them of the troupe's imminent arrival and assuring the actors of satisfactory accommodations . . . The message to all the commanding officers, when decoded, read: "Buck Benny Rides Again."

Lieut. George K. Arthur arrived in this country a few days ago, to make preparations for a musical show to be presented by the Special Service of the Eighth Air Force in Britain. A few days before he left London, Lieutenant Arthur was riding in the subway, and noticed that the bearded man sitting next to him was George Bernard Shaw. He asked the playwright to sign his Short Snorter bill. Shaw obliged, and then sighed: "We really should be doing more than this for the Americans."

Puppet's Whine

Stab-'em-in-the-back Mussolini is crying to high heaven that he was tricked and betrayed. Or if it is not the voice of the once bellowing Duce carrying this doleful message to confused and war-sick Italians, the Nazis have done a rather striking job of deception. Most of those who heard the broadcast seem to believe that it was actually made by Mussolini, although he was obviously much deflated in spirit. But in point of fact it makes very little difference whether this wail of woe came from the lips of the fallen dictator or from the lips of some other little puppet upheld by German bayonets. The important consideration is that the former Fascist master of Italy is only a relic of the past and no amount of puppy-dog whining over the radio can make him anything more than that again.

We do not know whether the story of Mussolini's "betrayal," as told in this broadcast, is true. But here again it is a matter of no real significance in the tragic storm that is sweeping over Italy. If the Italian people can still summon their humor in the midst of this ordeal, we surmise that they will laugh heartily at how the great betrayer was so simply betrayed. This story alone illustrates how bankrupt Mussolini's regime had become. If there had been any loyalty left in Italian hearts for the Fascist dictator, his followers would have risen in vigorous protest when he was spirited away in a Red Cross car and Badoglio was installed in his place. Italian troops would have joined with the Nazis in an attempt to restore fascism instead of turning their guns on Mussolini's German friends in many places. And, of course, the Italian navy would not have gone over to the liberating invaders. The Duce could be deposed by a simple trick only because his empire and his regime had already crumbled into ruins.

Against this background his note of injured innocence because his long years of "loyalty" to the King had been rewarded by treachery is worthy of a Charlie McCarthy program. The same may be said for his assertion that his empire and 20 years of glory have been extinguished by foul play. It may be that he is right in declaring that "the unity of the Italian people has not been lost." But whatever unity there is among the Italians now seems to be directed against Mussolini and the Nazi cause for which he pleads. Italians continue to fight German troops in northern Italy and the German radio reports that Badoglio is in North Africa raising Italian troops to help drive the Nazis out of Italy. In the face of the liberating force that is now sweeping over Italy, the empty words of this rescued puppet will be nothing more than chaff in the wind.

'Safe Return'

The official communiques on air actions follow a certain formula which must draw unmirthful smiles from the men actually engaged in combat. "All our aircraft returned safely" is a common concluding sentence. Sometimes, after noting the damage done to enemy ground installations and the destruction of enemy interceptor planes, the communique ends baldly: "Four (or 40) of our aircraft are missing." The net impression is that the balance of our raiding force landed comfortably and happily, the pilots ready to leap from their planes for a rousing celebration.

We have a notion, however, even at this comfortable distance from the fighting lines, that the airmen who return "safely" are in no celebratory mood. And they are probably greeted at their home base, not by cheering comrades, but by ambulances to take away their dead and wounded. Few of the Fortresses or Liberators which take off on the long, perilous flights over Germany are likely to come back unscathed. They must pass through a terrible ordeal of enemy fire from the ground and from fighter planes. You have seen occasional pictures of our big bombers with gaping holes in their wings or fuselage. The men who fly inside them are scarcely immune to the murderous salvos that rip such holes.

It is understandable that the Army should be reluctant to release precise information as to the number of fliers killed or seriously injured in planes which make a "safe" return. The enemy can make use of such data. But the enemy knows that we have not escaped unhurt. Without violating security it should be possible for the Army to give the American public a clearer understanding than it has yet had of the sacrifices entailed in our air operations. One encouraging step in this direction was taken in the news of the Paramushiru raid which disclosed that half our bombers were lost and that most of the others returned damaged and with casualties. A price is exacted for every blow we strike against the enemy. We at home need to appreciate that price if we are to understand and assess the progress it has purchased.

Smaller Army

Just for the sake of the record it may be worth pointing out that there is at least one point on which the armchair strategists—or some of them at any rate—have shown themselves a little more perspicacious than the professionals. In other words, the Army has now slowed down its rate of inductions just as many civilian critics urged it to do months ago. These critics properly raised the question of how far the victory itself might be jeopardized by the continual depletion of manpower on the domestic front. Again there was the question of whether the breakup of homes and mass migration, with their profound social and economic disturbances, were necessary to winning the war. Finally, there was the question of how far the requirements of enormous armies might interrupt or delay the shipments of materials and equipment to the fighting fronts.

In his testimony the other day before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, Undersecretary of War Patterson stated that Army estimates of the number of officers and men required by the end of this year had been reduced from about 8,200,000 to about 7,700,000. Since in considering manpower requirements, generals naturally and invariably err on the side of caution, the important point is not that the figure should have been reduced by a mere half million, but that it should have been reduced at all.

It might be pointed out that the original figure of 8,200,000 (which of course excludes the men in service with the Marines, the Navy and the Coast Guard) is somewhat above the estimated total strength of the German Wehrmacht at the time of the invasion of Poland, that is to say at the very beginning of the war. Such a figure could have been arrived at only on the assumption that the United States might in the end have to fight the war alone. It must have taken into account such possibilities as a collapse of Russia, a capitulation of China and even the destruction of Britain. None of these possibilities could have seemed entirely out of the question in the early months of 1942, and they must inevitably have entered into any calculations of grand strategy.

But as the war progressed and these possibilities began to appear more and more remote, the tempo of conscription was accelerated rather than decreased. Farms, mines and factories were steadily depleted of what had been considered essential workers, and the domestic manpower problem reached the proportions of a crisis. As long ago as September 1, 1942, this newspaper began to question whether the pace of conscription was not proceeding much too rapidly, not only for the ultimate well being of the Nation, but even in the interests of the war itself. We cannot help thinking that questioning of this sort, which came from many different sources, was helpful to the Army in making its decision to conserve manpower within its own ranks.

Doings In Dalmatia

Yugoslav guerillas are reported to have taken the ancient Dalmatian seaport of Split or Spalato and to be laying siege to the city of Fiume in Italian territory about 150 miles farther up the Eastern Adriatic coast. The Germans are reported to be counter-attacking at Split with dive bombers, and what appears to be land fighting is taking place between the Nazis and the guerillas in the country immediately to the north of that city. One dispatch refers to the guerillas as "Partisans," which probably means they are followers of General Tito and not of General Mihailovitch, and it is said they are being advised by Russian tactical officers. Thus it would seem that the guerilla armies now operating in Dalmatia are comprised mainly of Croats and Slovenes. But another dispatch says that some kind of understanding and coordination of tactics has been worked out between the Partisans and General Mihailovitch's Chetniks (mainly Serbs and Montenegrins), among whom a British military mission is now known to be operating.

Meantime the Berlin radio has admitted that the Nazis are looking for trouble in Albania, which, until the recent armistice, was garrisoned and policed by Italians. Obviously, this sudden and quite impressive burst of activity on the part of the Yugoslav guerillas is not without significant relation to the general Allied plan and certainly not without relation to the further invasions of the European continent forecast by President Roosevelt in his message to Congress last Friday. If, for example, the next landing is to be somewhere along the lower Adriatic in Albania or in western Greece, or even if it is to be on the Aegean side of Greece, the serious threat to German communications offered by these guerillas becomes immediately clear. And if the present movements of the British and American armies in lower Italy turn out to be merely diversionary operations to cover the real attack elsewhere, Hitler's strategists, who have been steadily reported as preparing their principal defense lines along the Valley of the Po, will be badly outwitted. We have, of course, no way of knowing, in advance of events, whether or not this is the case. But unless the Germans' intelligence is better than we suppose it to be, neither have they.

Postwar Planning

All of us, in a sense, are postwar planners. For it is one of the distinguishing characteristics of the human species that its members strive consciously to shape their own destinies. But individual fortunes are so largely conditioned in the contemporary world by impersonal political, economic and social forces that our planning today must be in terms of whole societies. We know that when the war ends we shall be faced by changed conditions, that we shall be challenged by unprecedented means and opportunities for the betterment of human relations. It is wholesome and natural, therefore, that men should be putting their heads together to devise ways by which to meet that challenge.

The Twentieth Century Fund prepared a catalogue some time ago of national organizations within the United States engaged in continuing studies of postwar problems with a view toward guiding the future course of this Nation. No fewer than 137 organizations were included in its list—28 of them governmental, 109 private agencies. And the list does not embrace business concerns grappling with their own special postwar problems or libraries and universities whose work has only a general application to the future.

When one considers the variety of problems which the postwar world will pose, it is scarcely surprising that the agencies grappling with them should be so numerous. Some of them are mainly concerned with international political relations. Others are concentrating on general economic and social matters as they will emerge when the war is ended. Many devote themselves to particular aspects of the future, such as agriculture, education, engineering, housing, religion, labor. A majority of the organizations are of a research and educational character with no doctrinaire solutions for the difficulties that lie ahead. Quite a few, however, have been organized to press for adoption of a particular plan in which their members have faith.

No doubt there is a good deal of overlapping among the activities of all these groups. The Twentieth Century Fund has clearly rendered a service in making them known to one another so that duplication of effort can be avoided. Of even greater importance, perhaps, is the need for integration of all the scattered research and thinking now in progress—for common ground on which the postwar planners can meet and modify their ideas, if necessary, in the light of one another's findings. It is time for the planning to come out of the laboratory and be presented to the public. One of these days we shall have to agree on the course we wish to pursue.

Dependent Allowances

Representative Martin, Republican minority leader, intends to press for speedy passage of legislation increasing allowances for the dependents of servicemen. Even with the 15 or 20 per cent addition that appears to be contemplated, the dependents of servicemen would have to get along on very meager incomes. It is, therefore, as Representative Martin says, a matter of simple justice to raise existing allowances, regardless of whether any action is taken in respect to the drafting of fathers.

So far the financial sacrifice exacted of servicemen has not been a matter of serious public concern because of deferment of fathers. Although the unattached man or the newly married man may have to abandon a well-paying civilian job when he is drafted, as a rule he does not need to worry about how to make both ends meet. On the other hand, the drafted family head with several children in the "expensive" age groups may be distracted by his inability to make adequate provision for his dependents from the limited allowances permitted under existing law. A man in this position, wondering how his family is to be properly fed, clothed and housed is in no frame of mind to give his undivided attention to soldiering. In many cases he will be more of a liability than an asset to the Army, and he is certainly going to add disproportionately to the personnel costs of the Army by virtue of his multiple dependent allowances.

This problem of dependency will be much less serious if a little common sense is exercised in the selection of fathers, by passing over older men with several children in favor of younger men with only one or two dependents. The indiscriminate drafting of fathers would give rise to severe hardships in many cases, even if dependent allowances should be liberalized, while the total cost of such allowances would run into very large figures.

AFTER A NIGHT RAID

London, 1940

How precious then, the brave but tattered days,
When we the many went our quiet ways
While they, the Few, swift into battle lined,
On wings of liberty saved all mankind.

As God perhaps, the spacious dawn surveyed,
That out of night and chaos He had made,
So we, the miracle of morning light
Beheld; each breaking moment, infinite.

As dark and circumscribing horror fled,
So dawn, on russet trees, broke softly red,
And life, night-beggared to a moment's span,
Was rich again with Time, when day began.

Congress Resolves

By Mark Sullivan

Postwar Procedure

THIS WEEK the House of Representatives will act upon the country's postwar foreign policy. The House's action will be official—it will formally express the opinion of a branch of Congress. Being official, this coming House action is to be distinguished from the scores of proposals volunteered by all sorts of persons and groups.

The proposals having official standing are three. One is the resolution to be acted upon by the House the coming week. Another is a resolution which the Senate will act upon later. Third is the rather surprising position taken by the President in his message to Congress last week

First, the House. The resolution to be acted upon by the House this week is brief and limited. It would put the House on record as favoring "appropriate international machinery" to maintain peace, and "participation by the United States therein."

These words are general. They omit all controversial details, such as use of force to maintain peace. Unless the House is willing to pass this resolution, it will hardly pass any. Defeat of this resolution would put the House in the position of favoring complete isolation. This is not expected. What the House does—whether it passes the resolution and by what majority; whether amendments will be proposed and what the House does about them—all this will be watched by the country. It will be watched also—with especial keenness—by foreign governments. For foreign governments know that the measure of what the United States will do about postwar international agreements is the measure of what Congress is willing to indorse. The action of the House will be interpreted as an index of American public opinion, for the body has just reassembled after a two-month recess, in which all had opportunity to learn the opinions of their constituents.

NEXT, THE SENATE. Among several proposals in the Senate, one is outstanding—the one introduced jointly by two Republicans and two Democratic Senators, sometimes called the Ball resolution. While this is still in the Foreign Relations Committee, it is practically certain to be acted upon, and to be the one about which the Senate debate will center.

This Senate resolution goes much farther than the House one. It calls upon the United States to "take the initiative"—these words are themselves far reaching. We are to take the initiative in forming a "permanent organization of the United Nations." This Senate resolution brings up the hotly argued factor of force, an international army or police force. It would have the United Nations maintain a "military force" and suppress . . . any future attempt at military aggression by any nation."

FINALLY, the President's position. If Mr. Roosevelt's message to Congress last week had not dealt so extensively with the war, and if the country had not been so intent upon dramatic actions of our armed forces in Italy—that portion of Mr. Roosevelt's message dealing with postwar would have been recognized as surprising. Surprising, that is, in its mildness, its so-to-speak negativeness. Hardly at all—if indeed at all—did Mr. Roosevelt recommend any formal international arrangement whatever. His words were:

"We seek a national cooperation with other nations toward the end that world aggression be ended, and that fair international relationships be established on a permanent basis. The policy of the good neighbor has shown such success in the hemisphere of the Americas that its extension to the whole world seems to be the logical next step."

That position is materially short of what has been commonly attributed to the President. The "good neighbor" policy is hardly an "international organization" or an "international machinery." It is largely a course of conduct, an attitude of nations toward each other. Such a proposal will arouse no controversy. Mr. Roosevelt may intend this to be merely a "logical next step" to be followed by something more formal.

In thus limiting his present position, Mr. Roosevelt may intend to let public opinion, and sentiment in Congress, develop what it will. By such a course, Mr. Roosevelt would avoid what President Wilson brought upon himself when he went far out in front to take the initiative in forming the League of Nations.

Italy And Air Power

By Paul Schubert

Objectives Of The Campaign

THE CAMPAIGN on the Italian peninsula is an excellent demonstration of the extent to which "air power" has come to dominate the strategy of modern war.

This is a ground campaign. It appears to have tied up a good deal of the Allied air power in the Mediterranean theater—precisely the kind of "hobble" that air power extremists have always decried. Here are the "land generals" using their control over the eagles of the skies for the sordid purpose of capturing square miles of dirt, a very slow and bloody business.

Why do the "land generals" want those square miles of dirt?

Curiously enough, the "land generals" have been induced to undertake the difficult campaign into Italy by the prospect of gaining bases from which aircraft can be operated. The British-American invasion is an air-power invasion. The prospect of operating planes against the Axis more effectively than those planes can now be operated has led the combined chiefs of staffs and the political heads of our top war leadership to harness tremendous quantities of British-American sea, land and air power in the interests of war-in-the-air . . . For this purpose many a dirt soldier and many a blue-water sailor who have never set foot in a plane will die for the glory and advancement of our air superiority.

SEEN as an air base, the Italian peninsula is divided into two zones of military influence upon the continent and the Mediterranean area.

From Florence downward the Italian boot is in effect the largest of the Mediterranean islands. From an air-power point of view, possession of this part of the peninsula would mean the extension of our command of the air over both the Tyrrhenian Sea and the Adriatic and the extension of our bombing range deep into the Balkans. The result would be the isolation of Corsica and Sardinia, on the one hand, and on the other hand, the isolation of southern Yugoslavia, of Albania and much of Greece . . . of Crete and many of the Aegean islands.

Some of these results, indeed, we attained as soon as Allied forces entered the heel of the Italian boot. The position of Crete, in particular, became perilous as soon as we took Taranto, not only because of our new air power possibilities, but by virtue of our one-sided naval domination of this area.

We have used air power skillfully and positively in putting through the long conquest of the Mediterranean area. Every successful move made at sea or on the ground has been pushed forward under the cover of air superiority. Each move made at sea or on the ground has been for the purpose of gaining new air bases—of extending both our strategic and our tactical air power still farther.

Did Italy fall because our troops had taken Sicily and had begun the invasion of the mainland?

Or did Italy fall because our strategic air power was able to strike Genoa, Turin, Milan, Florence . . . Rome?

The chances are that the bombings would not have been possible without the invasions.

Control of the Italian peninsula south of Florence means the ability to make more successful invasions to either side of Italy—to Sardinia and Corsica, to Crete and the Balkans.

And north of Florence?

North of Florence, the soil of Italy leaves the Mediterranean and becomes part of the great land mass of the continent.

This part of Italy is a poor pathway to the continent for land armies. The Alps ring it in a forbidding barrier to the infantryman, the artilleryman. Alpine passes are few, and those few involve interminable climbs. Rail transports must pass through the bottlenecks of long tunnels, of ravines subject to block by avalanche.

BUT the north of Italy, seen as an air base, extends the range of British-American strategic bombing to places now considered "safe" by the Germans.

See how the circle of air power expands—

It covers the south of France—Marseilles and Toulon. It rings around through south Germany to Austria . . . Bohemia and Moravia . . . Slovenia—

Once the airmen have bases in North Italy, the Germans will face strategic air bombardment beside which anything they have so far seen, will appear light indeed.

That's what lures us. The men we land in Italy are fighting for air bases. The war has become an air power war.

What a good thing it is for America that we became infatuated with the "gasoline buggy" and learned as much as we do know about the gasoline engine!

Too Much Starch

Copies of your editorial in Wednesday's Post on the laundry situation should be sent by registered mail to every laundry in this area.

Their mysterious propensity for starching collars and cuffs needs some explanation. For the past 18 months I have begged my laundry to cut out this service, but without results.

In my own experience, heavily starched collars increase the number of shirts sent to the laundry. If my experience is typical, the suspicion arises as to whether starch is being used deliberately to increase volume of business.

It would be interesting to know how plentiful starch is, how much starch is used, how much manpower is required for starching.

What Farmers Need

I have read a letter addressed to the editor signed by "a Virginia Dairyman."

The writer has lived in Washington for many years, but was brought up on a farm in Montgomery County, Md. In my opinion, this Virginia dairyman is right in many respects. Most city people realize that the farmer is receiving too little for his products. The public, too, believes it is paying enough. So where is the profit going? There is only one answer, the middleman.

Men and women in all walks of life are receiving good salaries, yet the farmer is the foundation of all our lives and keeps us eating so we can make these good salaries.

Mr. John L. Lewis can call a strike and the Government just about always grants the request. The farmers are asking only for a price that will keep their heads above water, but nobody ever seems to do anything about it. In the first place, they need a good Representative on Capitol Hill.

This situation does not only exist in the milk industry; it exists in many other products that the farmer produces.

We read from time to time where these things are being investigated. I have come to the conclusion that the word must have two meanings. In Webster's it means "to inquire into systematically." In Washington it means "to forget it automatically."

Ridiculous Reports

In his column, your Mr. Kluttz says: "The Federal Bureau of Investigation has one of the very best systems to keep a constant check on its employes to make sure they have plenty of work." He then proceeds to tell us what this "very best system" is.

To the executive the system they are using is the essence of bureaucracy and inefficiency. To make all its workers write lengthy reports at the end of the day as to what has been done is the most concrete proof that the FBI has no conception of efficiency. To have those daily reports audited by "the agent in charge and the bureau chiefs do the job here" is an admission that valuable time is being wasted on paper work, the taxpayer's money is squandered on maintaining many more workers to check, audit, to review and to file these ridiculous reports.

ROBERT SIMPSON.
Washington, Sept. 1.

Law That Is Folly

It is interesting to note your news reports that the gasoline rationing administration report a consumption of gasoline in the District of Columbia approximately double the rationed allowance and suspect the existence of a so-called black market.

In other words, having discovered that there was over the period twice as much gasoline available as they estimated there would be, they condemn the users of it instead of increasing the gasoline allowance so as to legitimatize its use.

It was my observation during the limitation on pleasure driving that the majority of drivers sought to comply with the regulation and it has been my observation over a period of years that most American citizens prefer to obey a law even though it be impregnated with folly and resort to a violation of it only under urgent necessity.

I venture to suggest, therefore, that the gasoline administration consider that doubling the allowance would abate the black market. At least it would serve to give most of us some confidence in the good faith of those empowered to ration.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Happy Butcher

A butcher has just been sentenced to 5 days in jail and fined $25 for charging too much for meat. But we are not worried. If he will just take a small steak to the hoosegow with him his confinement will be brief.

* * * *

It seems that this butcher charged $1 for a rib steak that should have cost 72 cents, and 59 cents for 42 cents worth of chops. Elmer Twitchell is heading a national campaign to have his sentence and fine rescinded and some sort of medal substituted. "Any butcher who doesn't overcharge more than that these days is a friend of the public," declares Elmer.

* * * *

We understand the butcher resents assistance and is mighty glad to go to jail.

All butchers need a rest, he says, and few would not welcome a chance to get into a nice, cool cell away from all those customers and their ceaseless demands, arguments and squawks.

"I talked with this butcher," said Mr. Twitchell today, "and he is delighted. He says five days will be too short a time to get away from all those rulings, counterrulings and Greek orders issued to the markets by OPA every week.

"I tried to tell him that it was all wrong putting butchers in jail, as it was the chiseling, bribe-taking wholesalers and black market racketeers who belonged there. They are the guys who make the butchers violate OPA ceilings. But he ordered me to let him alone. He said jail would be wonderful compared to the life he has led trying to follow the rules and meet the stern demands of his customers.

"The poor butcher was a pathetic figure, but very happy. He wanted to know if it would be wrong to send the judge a box of cigars for being so nice.

"He said that all he wanted to be sure of was that he had a cell above the third floor so he couldn't hear any customers who followed him to jail to demand choice cuts as a personal favor.

"And he said he hoped that two or three customers, one a politician, another a jurist and a third an OPA checker who always phoned him when they wanted a choice cut at a special price wouldn't be given the jail telephone number.

"His main satisfaction was that he would get away from the black market racketeers. I told him he needn't worry about that. None of these birds ever get sent to jail."

All-Out Arlene says she hopes the postwar world will bring back breakfast in bed.

Chester Bowles of OPA is dropping lawyers and putting trained businessmen into important OPA posts. He has an idea, quite absurd of course in these times, that it might be wise to have vital things done by people who knew what they are talking about and who don't do much talking anyhow.

Hot Water

Permit me to express my admiration and appreciation of The Washington Post, with particular emphasis on its expose of the situation with respect to the unclean condition of many restaurants in Washington in which city I have resided for 22 years and to which I am a taxpayer. In connection with uncleanliness, may I suggest that a campaign be inaugurated against apartment house operators in Washington who fail to furnish hot water in such houses?

The apartment where I have lived for several years, is equipped with a central heating and hot water system which requires coal for its operation but, for the past six or eight months, there have been few occasions when the water was actually hot; as a matter of fact, for a month of that time in the early spring there wasn't even tepid water. It is common knowledge that hot water for lessees of apartment houses is an essential service; that neither household nor personal cleanliness can be maintained with cold or even tepid water; that both can be maintained only with hot water and eternal vigilance.

At the end of a long, weary day to come home to filling all available utensils with water and heating it on a gas stove in order to do necessary dishwashing, laundry and bathing is prohibitive from the standpoint of energy and silly when the facilities for hot water (for which we pay) are at hand—if the rental agent, who is the manager but not ostensibly so, were sufficiently interested in human welfare to assure such service. Of course, coal is expensive, but, even with the housing shortage, necessary, if we are to have hot water. We tenants appreciate that management has problems in these days but we also appreciate that the money paid the gas company by the tenants of this apartment who refuse to go without hot water would, in due course, purchase many war bonds.

Isn't there some agency—governmental or otherwise—charged with the responsibility of correcting such situations as the above? Justifiable complaints are met with such statements as "You'll have to get out. I don't want complainers in my places. Just get out! I'll move your furniture into the street in the morning while you're gone," etc.

Balkan Gateway

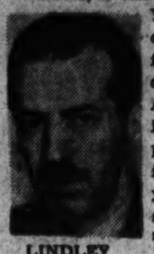
Outlook In Yugoslavia



LINDLEY

ALTHOUGH THE SAFETY OF KING PETER and his ministers requires that details be withheld, it can be said that the Yugoslav government's transfer to Cairo is due quite soon. Allied diplomatic quarters expect the move from London to yield wholesome results. It should help dispel vague suspicions that the British foreign office controlled the King. It will assure closer liaison between his ministers and the guerillas in the field. It may even bring about some trading of places by Yugoslav ministers and fighting leaders, building up the cabinet's prestige. Its only military ornament now is General Mikhailovitch, the doughty minister of war.

Conquest of Italy's boot and the surrender of its fleet have opened the door to the Adriatic, and when Allied aviation has been established at Foggia and possibly farther north, this arm of the Mediterranean should be safe for Allied shipping. Reports last week that Yugoslav guerillas had captured three Adriatic ports, including Split, and were contesting German control of the whole Dalmatian coast, suggested that an invasion doormat was being spread.

These reported gains of the Yugoslav guerillas have not been officially confirmed, however. Even if they are true, they may be only temporary occupations in the wake of the Italian surrender. The Germans are understood to be replacing the lost Italian garrisons along the Dalmatian coast with Croatian troops.

There are additional reasons to doubt that Yugoslavia's early deliverance from the German yoke is to be expected. General Eisenhower's custom of centering on single objectives is by now well known, and the Italian campaign will preoccupy him for a considerable time. Before many weeks, the Dalmatian mountain passes will be snowbound, discouraging a diversionary thrust from the west. On the political side, London and Washington might well feel it desirable to have an understanding with the Russians before entering upon a major campaign in the Balkans. And, for strategic reasons, the western Allies may have decided anyway to strike their next blow at Germany, after Italy, in a different direction.

THE GERMANS meanwhile are reported to have made three moves toward replacing the former Italian garrisons on the Dalmatian coast with the Croats: First, they shifted control of Dalmatia from their Serbian puppets at Belgrade to their Croatian puppets at Zagreb. Next, they named a time-tested Nazi stooge, General Navratil, as Croatian minister of war. Finally, they teamed him and the Junkers General von Horstenau in the job of welding German with Croatian puppet troops into a cohesive defense force. The Croatians are described as well drilled in German tactics, equipped with latest German weapons, and seasoned in battle with the Yugoslav Partisans.

The evidence indicates that Von Horstenau will rely on the Croats in Dalmatia and expects no German reinforcements from the Russian front. But this does not mean that he can look forward to a winter of repose. He may secure the principal Dalmatian ports but he cannot hope to cover every inlet and cove. By stealth or quick sorties, the guerillas can arrange to rendezvous with Allied ships. Sicily and the boot afford bases for stepping up supply deliveries by air.

A year ago, the Partisans and Mikhailovitch's Patriots were at each other's throats. Patient diplomacy by London and Washington abated their fighting but racial and ideological differences still divide the groups. The Partisans, having set up miniature Soviets in some Croatian places, are accused by the Patriots of designs to Bolshevize Yugoslavia. The Patriots, in turn, are accused by the Partisans of working only in the interest of the "100 families" who, it's claimed, dominate Serbian politics, the army, professions and banks.

BUT BALKAN EXPERTS have long believed that agreement on a common strategy, if backed by adequate weapons, would fuse the factions against the Germans until they were expelled. Working toward agreement on strategy, the British officers in Mikhailovitch's headquarters have opened liaison with the Partisans. American officers presumably have arrived in Yugoslavia to present Washington's point of view.

The division of weapons between Partisans and Patriots, a matter having important postwar implications for Yugoslavia, will depend of course on the tasks the adopted strategy assigns each faction. This will probably require ratification by the projected meetings of American, British and Russian statesmen before being applied.

Judging by the sympathetic reference to King Peter in Prime Minister Churchill's Quebec speech, Britain leans toward the restoration of the monarchy over Serbs, Croats and Slovenes. Russia has not shown its hand but presumably wants a government with a foreign policy oriented to its own.

Foreign Directed Sabotage Totally Lacking, FBI Says

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 19.—The Federal Bureau of Investigation up to August 31, 1943, investigated 11,534 cases of suspected sabotage, found evidence of sabotage activity in 1105 cases, but "as yet there has been no evidence of accomplished sabotage having been directed by a foreign government," Lee R. Pennington, assistant to FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover, said today.

Addressing the twenty-second annual convention of the Disabled American Veterans, Pennington disclosed 485 persons had been convicted in sabotage cases, with other cases pending, but he added most cases in industrial plants involved persons "who have personal axes to grind." The nearest approach to accomplished sabotage directed by an enemy government, he said, was the case of the eight would-be saboteurs landed at Long Island, six of whom later were executed.

Pennington said that up to September 7, 1943, 14,738 enemy aliens had been taken into custody by the FBI, some of whom were released after hearings. Included were 5918 Germans, 5924 Japanese, 3503 Italians, 11 Rumanians, 11 Hungarians and one Bulgarian.

SSince the enactment of selective service, he told the veterans, the FBI disposed of more than 285,000 cases of alleged violations, with only 5764 resulting in conviction. Principal reason for violations, he said, was ignorance or carelessness.

U. S. Foreign Policy

Shield Of The Republic

By WALTER LIPPMANN

The Vulnerability Of America

Until the great powers construct an order of power which fits the realities of power, they must continue in a cycle of disaster.

In 1914 Germany, with no ally except the decomposing Austria-Hungary, went to war with a combination which finally included all the great powers. This insured her defeat. Germany realized her error, and in 1939 thought she had corrected it. She had made alliances with Italy and Japan, two of her former enemies, and a pact with Russia; and was carefully cultivating the isolationism of America. Thus she inaugurated her second war under auspicious circumstances, and won rapid, spectacular and cheap victories. Then she fell into the error she had sought to avoid. Instead of wooing the vanquished, she infuriated them. Instead of placating the neutrals she menaced them: Russia by invading her, America by threatening South America and promoting the alliance with Japan. This brought into being the great coalition which will destroy Germany's power.

The foreign policy of Japan during this same period consisted in antagonizing all her neighbors—Russia, China, Britain, the Netherlands, and the United States. The only ally she made was Germany. Therefore, the Japanese policy was a sheer gamble that Germany would engage all the great powers so as to give her a free hand. The gamble was correct in the year 1942. But only for that year.

The foreign policy of the other states was no less misguided. At the armistice of 1918 they constituted a combination so strong that they had within their reach the means to construct a new order of power. On the contrary they dissolved the combination. First, they ostracized Russia, being more concerned with the passing danger of an ideology than with the permanent order of power. Then they isolated Japan. Then they isolated themselves one from the other—America from Britain, and Britain from France, and France from Italy. When the victorious combination of 1918 had been completely dissolved, the new combination of the aggressor states was formed without opposition. Its first important action was to prevent the British, the French and the Russians from recreating their own alliance. At Munich Hitler compelled Great Britain and France to separate themselves from Russia. The United States had in the mean time persuaded itself, by passing the Neutrality Act, that it must be separated from Britain and France while it became increasingly embroiled with Japan.

To be isolated is for any state the worst of all predicaments. To be the member of a combination which can be depended upon to act together, and, when challenged, fight together, is to have achieved the highest degree of security attainable.

Since the first concern of the makers of foreign policy must be to achieve the greatest possible security, their object must be to avoid isolation by becoming members of an adequate combination.

When the alliance is inadequate because there is an opposing alliance of approximately equal strength, the stage is set for a world war. For then the balance of power is so nearly even that no state is secure.

Europe from 1900 to 1914 was in this condition of unstable balance. There was no certain preponderance of force with the Triple Entente or with the central powers. The question was put to the test of battle, and it was not until the weight of America was drawn in that a decision was reached.

From the rise of Hitler to Munich Europe was again in this condition. No relative strength of the Axis and of the opposing combination. Only when Hitler succeeded at Munich in separating the Franco-British allies from Russia had he so altered the balance of power that a war for the conquest of Europe was, from his point of view, a good risk.

If, then, the object is not only to provide for security against being defeated in war but also to organize a peace which prevents war, the alliance must be so dependable and so overwhelmingly powerful that there is no way of challenging it.

The area of American defensive commitment is not quite 40 per cent of the land surface of the earth. But it contains a little less than 25 per cent of the earth's population. Thus the potential military strength of the Old World is enormously greater than that of the New World.

The total combat power that can be mobilized by Britain, Russia, Germany, Japan, China, France, Italy, Poland, the central European and the Balkan countries is overwhelmingly superior to that which with the extremest exertion we could possibly mobilize.

These calculations may appear irrelevant because it must seem so unlikely that we should ever have to face the combined power of the Old World. Those who think this are granting what I am attempting to demonstrate—that the New World cannot afford to be isolated against the combined forces of the Old World and that it must, therefore, find in the Old World dependable friends.

Our military inferiority as an isolated state becomes more portentous when we realize how vulnerable is our strategic position. We have to defend two-thirds of the surface of the globe from our base in North America. We are an island. South America is an island. The Philippines are islands. Australia is an island. Greenland is an island. All these islands lie in an immense oceanic lake of which the other great powers control the shores. If we are isolated and have no allies among the great powers, we have to defend most of the lake without any strategic support upon the mainland from which an attack would be launched. If we knew the attack was being prepared, we would have no means of striking first to forestall it. We should have to let the combined forces of our enemies prepare themselves at their leisure, and strike when they were ready and where they chose. This would present us with the dilemma of remaining in an advanced stage of mobilization or leaving our vast and scattered domain undefended against surprise attack.

If this estimate of our position seems at first to be incredible, let us remember tha tit seems incredible only because we have talked about our isolation but have never been so foolish or so unlucky as to be in fact isolated. We were extricated in 1823 from the threat of true isolation by the statesmanship of Canning and Monroe. Their construction lasted until 1917, when we averted the threat of true isolation by Wilson's intervention. In 1940 we were so near to true isolation that for a whole appalling year the issue hung precariously upon the valor and skill of the British people, and upon the campaign which President Roosevelt waged to arouse this country in time to its awful peril.

But our luck might not hold. Our improvisations at the eleventh hour might the next time be too little and too late. Thus we must safeguard the future by founding our foreign policy on the necessity of forming dependable alliances in the Old World.

Allied Needs In Far East

As Seen By Chandler

By William Hipple
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in the South Pacific, Sept. 18 (Delayed).—Senator Albert B. Chandler (Democrat) of Kentucky, today urged appointment of Gen. Douglas MacArthur as supreme Allied commander in the Pacific and Asia. Chandler, on a tour of the war zones with a group of other Senators, said he would return to the United States with a message to the Senate and American people that the war effort against Japan must be increased.

A unified command for the Pacific and Asia, including Burma, India and China, was advocated by the Senator, who said his personal choice was General MacArthur, with whom he conferred recently. Senator Chandler said he had heard criticism of MacArthur in recent days, but refused to give details.

He praised MacArthur as a great military leader and said:

"I'm sold on his ability as a fighter and as a leader he represents our best chance of winning the war against Japan."

"Unless we soon get more men, guns and planes out here, China is in danger of being forced out of the war," Chandler declared. "That's the risk we are running. If China is knocked out, the war against Japan will be prolonged."

The Senator said what he had seen on his tour only deepens his conviction that Japan is our primary enemy and added: "We're not doing enough out here."

Senator Richard Russell (Democrat) of Georgia, the only other Senator in the traveling group to come here with Chandler, agreed that this area has suffered by the policy of "clipping" Germany first, but said he believed an increasing stream of supplies would be coming to the Pacific war zone.

Both Senators said this area has been getting more emphasis since the Churchill-Roosevelt conference at Quebec.

Chandler reiterated throughout his interview that the Japanese are our strongest enemy, having the balance of power on land.

He said America should not continue a policy of "take and abandon," meaning building foreign bases, leaving them and then having to fight to get them back again. He asserted we ought to keep control of our bases after the war. Asked if he meant we should keep planes and garrisons based in Australia, Chandler said:

"We need anchors out here, but we wouldn't want to do it unless the Australians wanted us to."

The bond of friendship between America and Australia has endured for a long time, he declared, and will continue.

Medical Group To Convene in D. C. Sept. 30

By Adele Bernstein
Post Staff Writer

One of the most ambitious scientific meetings held in the country this year will open Thursday, September 30, at the Mayflower Hotel, when the 15th Annual Scientific Assembly meets for a three-day conference and exhibit.

Theme of the assembly, which will be attended and addressed by internationally-known physicians and scientists, is "Medical Progress Since Pearl Harbor."

The exhibits, which will be shown in the Chinese Room, the Pan-American Room and the 17th Street Parlor of the Mayflower, will underscore medical problems and progress growing out of the war, both on the battle fronts and among the civilian population.

The entire proceedings, from September 30 through October 2, will be limited to attendance by medical men only. All doctors in uniform in or near the Washington area being invited to take part.

Friday night, October 1, however, the public will be admitted for an hour and a half, from 7 to 8:30 p.m., to view the ambitious and highly detailed exhibits.

Principal among these will be the Naval Research exhibit, the Public Health Service exhibit, the Army Medical Museum exhibit, a diversified scientific exhibit erected by the George Washington University School of Medicine, and a display of crime pictures and models by the District Coroner's office, contributed by Drs. A. Magruder MacDonald, C. J. Murphy and R. M. Rosenberg and managed by Capt. John A. Fowler of the Metropolitan Police Department.

Included in the Naval Research exhibit will be cultures of the highly-guarded penicillin drug, which has saved so many lives on the battlefields. Chemical methods for obtaining drinking water from sea water will be demonstrated, as will the most recently developed techniques of brain examination.

The Public Health Service exhibit is planned to illustrate vividly the following home-front medical activities:

Nursing on the home front, conducted by the Instructive Visiting Nurse Society of Washington, D. C.

Occupational therapy, demonstrated by St. Elizabeths occupational therapy department.

Contributions of District of Columbia physicians to the war, illustrated by the Public Health Service and the D. C. Medical Society.

Selassie Sees Victory Near

Hails Italy's Collapse

By the Associated Press

Addis Ababa, Sept. 17.—Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia, today hailed the collapse of Italy as a bright signal that the overthrow of the other enemies of civilization was very near.

The text of his statement:

"Two years after the defeat of the Italian armies in East Africa and five months after the end of the North African campaign Fascism has completely collapsed.

"Here in Ethiopia there is special satisfaction that the whole fabric of Mussolini's regime has crumbled.

"There could never have been peace or justice in the world so long as that regime of force and brutality existed. That is why the defeat of Mussolini's government demands also the overthrow of Hitler's regime and Japan's tyranny.

"What has happened in Italy is an assurance that the overthrow of the other enemies of civilization is very near.

32,500 See Nats Win Pair From Yanks, 3-2, 5-1

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

That outpouring of 33,000 fans at Griffith Stadium yesterday was some kind of evidence that the unsettled state of world affairs has not quite loosened the game's grip on the public liking. We'd call it an amazing turnout under the conditions.

POVICH

Certainly the fans didn't go out to the stadium to see the Nats battle it out with the Yankees for the pennant. The Nats' pennant chances were long since dispelled. The Nats' hopes have boiled down to a chance for second place and if baseball can draw 33,000 to watch a team fighting for second place it's some kind of a tribute to the sport.

The Yankees recognized Washington as a profitable baseball town years ago, which explains the frequent trades between the two clubs. Last year, for instance, when the Yankees had a spare outfielder, Mike Chartak, they received cash offers from both the Washington and the St. Louis clubs. The Nats offered $12,000 for Chartak and the Browns offered $14,000. The Yankees sold him to Washington, because as a Yankee official explained it:

"It was good business to take a $2000 loss on the deal and sell him to Washington instead of St. Louis. That town doesn't draw, anyway, but if they build up a team in Washington, a visiting club can go in there and take away a pretty hefty check. We think of those things when we make a deal."

On that particular Chartak trade, however, the Yankees outsmarted themselves, it developed. Chartak was no great success with the Nats and Clark Griffith a few weeks later sold him to St. Louis for the same price the Yankees had turned down, making a profit on the deal.

The Yankees were a bit miffed by that shrewd piece of business by Griffith but not to the extent that they still refused to recognize the advantage of trading with Washington. So it was that when the Yankees felt they could spare Gerry Priddy, they shunted him also to the Nats despite the fact various other clubs made attractive offers for the second baseman.

The Yankees have to think about such items as the crowd-drawing potentials of other clubs in the league. They depend on their end of the visiting clubs gate receipts to enable them to make a profit, or at least stay out of the red. They have the biggest payroll of any team in the league, the largest scouting staff and more overhead in the form of stadium taxes to worry them.

They're careful, though, to slough off their extra talent to the clubs that won't hurt them too much. In the years when the Red Sox and Tigers were menacing the Yankees, President Ed Barrow consistently refused to talk trades with those two clubs. In the case of Priddy, they knew they were strengthening the Nats, but gambled correctly that the Washington club wouldn't be bolstered to the point of being a serious pennant threat.

Now that the Nats have improved and are runners-up in the league, the Yankees will cast about for other clubs to deal with if they come up with any surplus talent, planting their trades in the towns where improved clubs will draw better crowds for the Yankees, but not quite threaten the Yanks' grip on the pennant.

If there is one item that is worrying the Yankees at this point, it is the possibility that the Cardinals will marshal a brigade of left-handed pitching to toss at them in the World Series. The Yankees scarcely know how to act against southpaw pitching. When they faced Mickey Haefner yesterday it was the first time since August 20 they had seen a left-hander start.

The Cardinals can throw no less than four left-handers at the Yanks. Manager Billy Southworth would have no qualms about starting either of his two left-handed rookies, Alpha Brazle and Harry Brecheen, against the Yankees, on their records, but he also has Max Lanier and Ernie White.

It was White who beat Spud Chandler in the series last year, 2-0. He was the most impressive of all the Cardinal hurlers in the series. White has been inactive since midseason with a soreness in his arm, but Southworth has hinted that he will be ready to start in the series. The Yanks confidently expect to see him in there.

The paradox is, of course, that Mort Cooper—Cousin Mortimer—who is the Cardinals' Big Winner, holds no terrors for the Yankees, who batted him out in his two starts in the last series, and counting All-Star games, has never beaten American Leaguers in four attempts.

The Football Roundup

Duke, Midwest Teams Show Grid Power in Early Tilts

Michigan, Purdue, Iowa Pre-Flight, Marquette Score in Convincing Manner

By Harold Claassen

Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Sept. 19.—Not much has happened in the first two Saturdays of the young football season but it was enough to indicate that the Midwest and Duke again have their powerhouse elevens.

Michigan, Purdue, the Iowa Pre-Flights and Marquette all came through with definite triumphs in their first outings last Saturday while Duke, which has made a practice of following a lean year with one of success, blasted the Camp Lejeune Marines, 40 to 0.

Northwestern, which is rumored on a virtual par with Michigan and Purdue, doesn't open until this weekend while Notre Dame, never a pushover, must again be classed among the best until proven otherwise.

Those six grid Goliaths, plus a Great Lakes squad that is above average despite its 23-to-13 setback by the Boilermakers, gives the Midwest an apparent edge over the remaining sectors.

Michigan bopped the Camp Grant Soldiers, 26 to 0, Saturday in a prairie preview of the Army-Navy game. With Naval Trainees Elroy Hirsch of Wisconsin and Bill Daley of Minnesota setting the pace, the Wolverines lived up to every expectation.

Hirsch counted two touchdowns, threw a 30-yard pass that was caught on the 3 and brought the opening kickoff back 50 yards as his contribution of the day.

Purdue, with former Illini Alex Agase and Tony Butkonick as the heroes, conquered Great Lakes, 23 to 13. It was an adequate testimonial to how Navy talent can revive a football team as the Boilermakers could score only 27 points in nine games last year. The 1942 Great Lakes array won from the Indianans, 42 to 0.

The Iowa Pre-Flights, making smart use of former professionals, subdued a civilian Illinois outfit, 32 to 18, and Marquette tormented Wisconsin's weak ends and tackles, 33 to 7.

Duke, its starting line-up boasting players from five different colleges, won as it pleased from the Marines, who had seven former collegians, three former pros and a semipro ace as their representatives.

Little Southwestern of Texas, with Southwest conference stars of previous years a dime a dozen, walloped North Texas Aggies, 20 to 0.

In the East, Rochester eked out another close victory, beating Yale, 14 to 12, when George Sutch, 200-pound former Temple back, collected all the Yellow Jackets points in the fourth quarter. Villanova trimmed Muhlenberg, 35 to 12, and

Chisox Split Double Bill With Browns

By International News Service

Chicago, Sept. 19.—The White Sox capped their home season with a 6-to-1 victory over the St. Louis Browns today after dropping the first half of a twin bill, 7 to 4.

Jimmy Dykes' boys solved the pitches of the Browns' Steve Sundra in the first game, getting 13 hits, but failing to come through with runs when needed. Four Sox errors behind the 10-hit pitching of Thornton Lee and Haynes helped the Browns get their runs.

Chet Laabs homered for the visitors in the third with two men aboard.

The Sox broke a 1-to-1 tie in the eighth frame of the nightcap and by batting around scored five runs on four hits. Three Brownie errors also helped. Potter and Galehouse pitched for the Browns; Humphries for the Sox.

26,000 See Sinkwich in Action Again

But Most Attention Goes to Halfback Fenebrock and His 3 Touchdown Passes

Detroit, Sept. 19 (AP).—The Detroit Lions, with Frankie Sinkwich tossing a touchdown pass in his pro debut, defeated the Chicago Cardinals, 35 to 17, in the National Football League opener today before 23,408 spectators. Fullback Harry Hopp scored three touchdowns for Detroit.

Making their debut under Coach Gus Dorais, who moved into the pro ranks from University of Detroit, the Lions scored as many touchdowns—five—in 39 minutes as they produced while losing all 11 starts last season.

Fenebrock Gets Attention

Hopp, veteran fullback from Nebraska, and Sinkwich, just up from Georgia via the Marine Corps, did plenty of damage, but the boy who caught the attention of the largest pro turnout here since 1941 was rookie halfback Chuck Fenebrock from UCLA via the Los Angeles Bulldogs. He fired three touchdown passes.

The Cardinals, likewise with a new coach in Phil Handler, seized a first period lead when center Lee Stokes booted a 20-yard field goal. After the following kick-off the Lions went 76 yards in three plays for a touchdown, Fenebrock sparking the drive.

First he passed 46 yards to End Ben Hightower. A line play lost one, and then Fenebrock circled right end for 10 yards to the 21, where he tossed a lateral to Hopp, who galloped unmolested the remainder of the way for the score.

The Cards went ahead in the second period when End Don Currivan blocked Hopp's punt and ran the ball 8 yards to pay dirt, but the Lions came back with a 67-yard march in nine plays topped by Fenebock's 8-yard scoring pass to Hopp.

Sinkwich Completes Pass

Sinkwich, who had two days of practice with his new team, made his first appearance in the second period. Just before the intermission he tossed a 17-yard touchdown pass to Bill Callihan that ultimately provided the winning margin.

Detroit got two more touchdowns in the third period. Fenebrock passed two yards to Hopp for one and Ned Mathews sprinted five yards around end for the other. The Cardinals got one in the fourth perion on a nine-yard pass from Joe Bukant to Marshall Goldberg.

Espey Resigns As Manager of Uline Arena

Jack Espey, who resigned as general manager of the Washington Redskins several months ago to manage Uline Arena, has tendered his resignation, to take effect immediately, to Migiel J. Uline, owner of the arena, it was learned last night.

JACK ESPEY

Espey, it is understood, will reenter the newspaper business after an absence of 14 years. He resigned from The Post sports staff in 1929 to take over the post of director of publicity at George Washington University and later handled the Redskins' publicity when the team came to Washington in 1937.

Uline last night said Espey's resignation came as a surprise to him and that he had no one in mind as his successor. He said he probably would manage the Arena himself.

New Respect For Seno in Redskin Camp

The Redskins will resume workouts today at College Park with Frank Seno, rookie halfback who played freshman and sophomore football at George Washington, due for more consideration as a running back with the second backfield unit.

Coach Dutch Bergman singled out Seno as the surprise of the Redskins scrimmage with Navy Saturday in Annapolis. The rookie halfback handled himself like a veteran and was away for several long gains.

Willie Wilkin and George Smith will take it easy today as the former pulled a leg muscle and Smith received a cut over the eye.

Bergman spoke highly of the Navy squad which opens its season Saturday against North Carolina Pre-Flight.

Ted Williams, purchased from the Philadelphia Eagles Saturday, will join the 'Skins tomorrow and if he can get in a little double time on the signals may play for a few minutes in the 'Skins last exhibition game against the Chicago Cardinals next Sunday in Buffalo.

Early Wynn, Haefner Halt Champions

Rookie Southpaw Gives N. Y. Two Hits After Wynn Cops 17th in Opener

By Shirley Povich

Post Staff Writer

To the extreme pleasure of a standing-room crowd of 32,500, Griffith Stadium's largest throng of the season, the Nats yesterday turned in a job that was highly acceptable to themselves—also a double victory over the Yankees.

They bumped off Spud Chandler in the ten-inning first game, 3 to 2, denying that young man his twentieth victory of the year, and in the second game they trotted out a two-hit pitcher in Little Mickey Haefner, who licked the Yanks, 5 to 1.

The Nats were making it nine straight wins for themselves and they did it by knocking off the Yanks top pitchers, Chandler and Ernie Bonham, in the same afternoon. It was a nice pair for the Nats to win, enabling them to stay three games ahead of the third-place Indians, who also were a double winner yesterday.

Survives Own Brainstorm

Early Wynn got the Nats home in the first game with a five-hit job against the Yankees that enabled him to survive his own seventh-inning brainstorm which permitted the Yanks to take a 2-1 lead at that point. Eventually the Nats brought off their victory by tying the score with two out in the ninth and producing the winning run with two out in the tenth on a single by Jake Powell, ex-Yankee.

In that second game, Haefner was the guy. He gave up two hits and a run in the first inning, and that was all. The little left-hander with his half-dozen varieties of curves held those great big Yankees hitless in the last eight innings.

Bob Johnson had a powerful hand in winning that first game for the Nats. They needed a run badly in the ninth with the Yanks holding a 2-1 lead and one man out. Whereupon Johnson walloped a triple toward the center-field corner to make it very exciting.

Powell's Single Wins Game

He languished on third base while Vernon tapped to Chandler for the second out, but the Nats got a break. Jake Early rapped a grounder at Nick Etten and the first baseman played around with it so long Early eventually beat the throw to the bag as Johnson scored the tying run. It was scored as a hit for Early.

There were no immediate signs the Nats were going to win the game in the tenth. Two were out when Case stepped into a curve ball for a single to center. Case's feints toward stealing worried Chandler to the extent that he walked Spence on four pitches. The former Yankee Powell got his lick at his old pals, a single to center. Weatherly fumbled the hit on the hop and had no chance to throw out Case at the plate.

Showing no signs of his recent hospitalization for grippe, Wynn commenced his bid for his seventeenth win of the season by facing only 15 Yankees in the first five innings. He didn't allow a hit until Keller singled in the fifth. Meanwhile Case's double and Powell's perfect squeeze play with two out staked Wynn to a 1-0 lead in the third.

That 1-0 lead endured until the seventh when the Yankees came up with two after Metheny led off with a single. Keller walked with one out and Etten singled over

Rally by Champs In Ninth of Second Game Frustrated

By the Associated Press

Sub-Par Rounds by Burnett, Rippy Feature Club Title Golf

Major Felix, Edlowitz Tie At Woodmont

Belle Haven Medal Won by C. C. Heath; Dana Belser Wins In Columbia Upset

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
Post Staff Writer

Volney Burnett's birdie-birdie finish at Indian Spring which gave him a sub-par 69 and a strangle hold on medal honors in the club championship, and a six under par round which sent Claude Rippy into the title finals at Washington, featured a day of club championship competition yesterday.

Two tied for the medal at Woodmont, Maj. Max Felix and Ellis Edlowitz; C. C. Heath won the qualifying test at Belle Haven; Dan A. Belser scored a match play upset at Columbia by defeating Dr. Howard Smith and Hugh Clines entered the Kenwood semifinals by beating M. Parker Nolan in other club title tourneys.

INDIAN SPRING

Volney Burnett's score at Indian Spring was six shots better than the 75s of defending titlist Eddie Ault, Harold Gordon and John Edward Fitzgerald.

Burnett started the day with a two-over par six on the first hole and went over par three times on the back nine but the two-time Maryland State Amateur champion put together two birdie streaks, on the toughest holes on the course, for his leading score.

Burnett's card

Par	Out	444 435 443—35
	In	444 434 534—35, 70
Burnett	Out	644 423 343—33
	In	545 544 523—36, 69

WASHINGTON

Rod Marion was Claude Rippy's victim in the semi-finals at Washington Golf and Country Club as Rippy ended the match, 6 and 5, on the thirteenth green and played the round out for a match play 64, six under regulation.

Maj. R. S. Alexander scored a minor upset in the other half of the Washington semifinals by defeating former champion Harold Hair, 2 and 1, and earning the doubtful honor of playing Rippy over the 36-hole route next Sunday. Rippy has been murdering par at Washington all summer.

CHEVY CHASE

A birdie streak midway on the back nine by team of Landra Platt and Don DeVeau accounted for a 2-and-1 victory over W. Beverly Mason and Dr. W. C. Stirling in the long delayed Treasurer's Cup finals at Chevy Chase.

The losers were 2 up on the thirteenth tee but dropped the fourteenth and ran into three consecutive birdie threes on the tough fifteen, sixteenth and seventeenth holes. Platt and DeVeau recently shot a handicap best ball 55 over their home course in a warmup round for the finals.

Mrs. Landra Platt and R. N. Miller won a mixed Scotch foursome at Chevy Chase with a 77-8, 69, taking both low gross and net. The next best net score was Mr. and Mrs. T. N. Israel's 96-20, 76.

COLUMBIA

Dana Belser played the back nine at Columbia in 34 strokes, 1 under par, in eliminating Dr. Howard L. Smith in the first round of match play in the club championship tournament in the only upset of the day. In other championship flight matches Lieut. Don Buckingham, medalist, defeated Colonel Reeder, 4 and 3; Buddy Bowie won over Allan Sherwin, 2 and 1; Thomas Webb, jr., defending champion, defeated Major Fletcher, 2 up; Joe Barse defeated Kenneth Haynes, 1 up, and George F. Miller defeated Edgar Merkle, 3 and 2. Dr. Edwin Rice won by default over Martin McCarthy, who could not play due to an injured hand.

WOODMONT

Defending and 11-time Woodmont Club Champion Howard Nordlinger was an automatic qualifier in the annual club title tournament and did not compete in the qualifying rounds which found Major Max Felix and Ellis Edlowitz tied with 76s. In the second flight Adlai Mann was medalist with a 90.

CHAMPIONSHIP FLIGHT

Howard Nordlinger vs. Jules Winkleman; Milton Harris vs. Cabot Feldman; Ellis Edlowitz vs. Dr. Lloyd Colton, Dr. Johnson vs. bye, Maj. Max Felix vs. R. A. Phillipson, Willard Goldheim vs. William G. Ilch, Ed Wortman vs. L. W. Jacobs, F. L. Mayberry vs. bye.

SECOND FLIGHT

Adlai Mann vs. bye; Morris Gewirz vs. Dr. J. Livingston; Al Small vs. I. A. Peake, Dr. Herman Bernstein vs. L. V. Freudberg.

KENWOOD

Hugh Clines played one-over-par golf in the Kenwood Club championship as he advanced to the semifinals with a 3-and-2 victory over M. Parker Nolan, former Congressional titlist.

Clines, who tied for the Federal golf championship early in the season and won the medal in the club tourney, meets Bill Brownrigg, Maryland junior champion, next week.

CHAMPIONSHIP FLIGHT

Hugh Clines defeated M. Parker Nolan, 3 and 2; Billy Brownrigg defeated Harry Sharpe, 3 and 2; Bill Wenzel defeated Nick Hollander, 4 and 3; George Borsari-Allen Laing match to be played tomorrow.

SECOND FLIGHT

H. B. Gillespie defeated Marvin Wire, 5 and 3; Don Dudley defeated Charles Veile, 1 up, 20 holes; Chester Hennigan defeated W. D. Lanier, 2 and 1; A. H. Youngquist defeated E. M. Warner, 4 and 3.

BELLE HAVEN

C. C. Heath, veteran of numerous public links tournaments before joining Belle Haven, took advantage of general high scoring to win medal honors in the Alexandria Club's title event with an 83. Pairings will be announced by Pro Tommy Ryan tomorrow.

PRINCE GEORGES

Qualifying opened in the Prince Georges Club Championship with 50 golfers turning in cards but no low scores were reported. Members have through next Sunday to play 18-hole medal rounds.

Al Hart Meets Gus Dorazio Tonight In Promising Heavyweight Battle

AL HART

GUS DORAZIO

Bout With Bivins Awaits Winner of 10-Round Fight at Griffith Stadium

By Al Costello
Post Staff Writer

Big Al Hart, Army War College Negro soldier, and Gus Dorazio, Philadelphia Italian, tonight go to war over a 10-round route at Griffith Stadium in what may develop into the finest heavyweight brawl Washington has seen in many a day.

The giant Hart, trained down from his usual 235 to a muscle-packed 223, boasts one of the most impressive records of any heavyweight campaigning today—a record that shows 23 victories and two draws in his last 25 scraps. And Dorazio, who has met 'em all with success, has been here for a week training hard and has shown himself to be in the finest shape of his career. Hart will enjoy between 20 and 25 pounds advantage in weight with Dorazio expected to come in at slightly over 200.

There is no reason in the world why either should make a bad fight of it. Beckoning the winner is a bout with Jimmy Bivins, so-called "duration champ" by ring experts, who is signed, sealed and all but delivered to Promoter Goldie Ahearn for October 12. A shot at Bivins means a fat purse and it is not outside the realm of possibility for the winner tonight to upset the clever Cleveland Negro, which would definitely place him well up in the big-money brackets.

Gus Is Body-Puncher

Tonight features a body puncher (Dorazio) against the cever boxing skill and head-punching of Hart. Gus, who loves to come in throwing a sweeping left hook to the body, will find Hart one of the best of counterpunches. And Hart, despite his fine counterpunching ability, must beware Dorazio's body pokes for Gus is convinced the way to beat Hart is to the body. And he may be right. Clent Conway, with whom Hart merely toyed in winning a decision, connected with a left hook to the bread basket along about the sixth round and the surprised Hart found himself on the deck taking a nine count.

Dorazio hits as hard as Conway and more often, particularly with his slam-bang left hook to the tummy. It is this weapon Hart must solve and master to win.

Watch That Right!

Dorazio, on the other hand, must get inside of Hart's vicious counterpunching and stay away from Al's right, which of late has been showing heretofore unrevealed potency.

Jimmy Wilson, trainer and representative of Dorazio in the absence of Frank "Blinkie" Palermo, and who hasn't forgotten the deal that he thought was exceedingly sour when Dorazio lost to Baksi, will confer with Eddie LaFond, tonight's referee, when the fighters weigh in today at the Boxing Commission office, on rules and regulations. Wilson wants to know the ins and outs of the District point scoring system from an official source, and wants to know just what to expect when the big fellows start throwing punches with more or less abandon.

Promoter Goldie Ahearn confidently expects a gross gate of around $20,000 judging from advance sales and reservations. Approximately $2000 is already in the till.

Toronto Beats Royals, Enters Play-Off Final

Montreal, Sept. 19 (INS).—The Toronto Maple Leafs gained the final round of the International League baseball championship today by whipping the Montreal Royals, 5 to 1. It was the Leafs' fourth straight victory in the series, Montreal being completely shut out.

The Leafs pounded out 10 hits and received additional aid from the Royals, who committeed four costly errors. Three Royals' moundsmen were pounded off the hill, but Lloyd Dietz held the Leafs scoreless in the last frame.

Jim Hopper went the route for the Leafs. He gave up only four hits, fanned six, and allowed one walk.

The Leafs will tangle with the ultimate victor of the Newark Bears-Syracuse Chiefs series, in which the Chiefs gained a 3-to-2 edge today.

Chiefs Beat Bears, Take Play-Off Lead

Newark, N. J., Sept. 19 (INS).—The Syracuse Chiefs smothered the Newark Bears today, 4 to 0, to take a 3-2 lead in the semifinal round of the International League playoffs.

Tomas De Lacruz, winner of 21 games during the regular season, limited the Bears to three hits in hanging up his second triumph of the series. The Cuban fanned seven batters and walked none.

Dutch Mele and Dick West led the Chiefs' hitting assault, netting all the victors' runs. Mele slammed out two homers and West collected a triple and two singles.

Yanks Bow to Nats In Pair, 3-2, and 5-1

second to score Metheny and move Keller to third. The second Yankee run was a gift from Wynn who took Dickey's rap into the box on one hop and, with either a double play or a play on Keller at the plate staring him in the face, he inexplicitably held the ball and ended up by throwing Dickey out at first as Keller scored.

The Nats had a full time getting that run back, which they finally did on Johnson's triple and Early's tainted single in the ninth.

Behind Haefner, the second game was a soft touch for the Nats, who unloaded 14 hits against Bonham and took a 3-1 lead in the first inning. After the Yankees scored on Crosetti's single and Keller's triple off the right-field wall, the Nats themselves got tough.

Nats Score 3 in First

Case pushed a bunt past Bonham and beat it out and Stan Spence scored him with a triple high off the wall in right. Spence slid into third base and got right up again and scored when Etten's throw was muffed by Johnson. A bit later Powell beat out a bunt, and scored from second on Vernon's single to left.

The Nats gave Haefner another run to work with in the third when Spence led off with a single and stole second. He moved home on Bob Johnson's double to deep left which dropped safely to the great consternation of Charley Keller who was off looking for the ball in another direction.

Gene Moore, who batted for Case in the seventh when the Nats' base-stealing champion reported a bruised leg, led off the inning with a double to center and scored a moment later on Johnson's single to left. There was nothing to it, what with Haefner striking out seven Yanks and holding 'em hitless after the first inning.

There's a nine-game winning streak in Washington, but it isn't the one the Yankees came to town with . . . It belongs to the Nats, and the Yanks departed the city last night with a three-game losing streak—the Nats own another distinction . . . They are the only club to beat Spud Chandler twice this season, and have accounted for half of his four defeats . . . Dutch Leonard was supposed to pitch the secong game for the Nats yesterday but reported a sore wrist . . . It is probably just as well, because he may not have bettered Haefner's two-hit pitching job . . . Umpire Charley Berry displayed a pair of rabbit ears in the first game when he suddenly took exception to what was being said on the Yankee bench, whirled, and ordered catcher Ken Sears off the premises . . . Jimmy Dykes always said "the umpires in this league can hear better than they can see." . . . When George Case stole second in the fifth inning of the first game, it was his 51st theft, tying his record of last year, his peak season in the four years he has led the league in stealing . . . The Nats got on base frequently in the second game but they had a horrible time staying on base . . . Mickey Vernon was doubled off second base in the first inning when he was a bit too languid returning to the bag on Jake Early's fly, and in the second inning Bonham picked Priddy off first base . . . In the third inning, Bob Johnson got himself picked off second . . . The Nats don't play again until Wednesday night when the Browns move in . . . The actual paid attendance yesterday was 30,951 with 1000 soldiers and the pass list boosting the crowd to 32,500.

PBC Elevens Win

Two Police Boys' Club No. 11 grid teams turned in victories over No. 4 clubs yesterday. The 90-pounders scored, 10-0, while the 140-pounders registered by 13-0 at Fairlawn field.

Why neither CBS News Broadcasters nor CBS News Sponsors "OPINIONATE" the news:

Fifteen years ago CBS introduced a standard of practice for news broadcasting which has since governed the development and expansion of the world-wide news services of America's number-one network. Its philosophy is clearly set forth in the following instructions by Paul W. White, Director of CBS news broadcasts, to all members of the CBS news staff. These instructions apply equally to sustaining and sponsored news broadcasts.

"FIRST OFF, let it be emphasized that Columbia has no editorial views except in regard to radio itself. By extension, those men selected by us to interpret or analyze the news must also refrain from expression of editorial opinion or our non-editorial position becomes an empty shell.

"Each of you has been chosen by us because of your background and knowledge, insight, clarity of thought and special ability to make yourselves understood by vast audiences. We feel we have faced and met a considerable responsibility in your selection. We now feel that you must meet and face much the same responsibility in writing your analyses. For we have said to ourselves, 'We will not choose men who will tell the public what they themselves think and what the public should think.' And we ask that you say to yourselves, 'We are not privileged to crusade, to harangue the people or to attempt to sway public opinion.'

"In our view, then, the function of the news analyst is to marshal the facts on any specific subject and out of his common or special knowledge, to present these facts so as to inform his listeners rather than persuade them. The analyst should attempt to clear up any contradictions within the known record, should fairly present both sides of controversial questions and, in short, should give the best available information upon which listeners can make up their own minds. Ideally, in the case of controversial issues, the audience should be left with no impression as to which side the analyst himself actually favors.

"The news analyst, so restricted in the expression of his personal beliefs, may argue that he is being denied freedom of speech, that if he were employed by a newspaper or a magazine, he would have much greater latitude in speaking his mind. This argument brings us to the reasons for the policies I have just enunciated and the best way to deal with those reasons is to declare at once that there is a very considerable difference between the radio station or network and a newspaper or magazine.

"The essential contrast is supplied by the available opportunities for publication and for broadcasting. Nothing except lack of funds or unwillingness to risk them prevents anyone anywhere from starting a newspaper, a magazine, or a publishing house. Within the laws of libel, obscenity and sedition, the publisher is then able to say editorially anything he wishes to say, or to hire men to say it for him.

"But in the case of broadcasting, there are only a certain number of frequencies available for broadcasting stations and by the same token, only a limited number of networks can be created and maintained on a national basis. It is this limitation which makes for the basic difference between broadcasting and the press, from which stems our non-editorial policy. Without such a policy it is easy to see that a powerful and one sided position on serious issues could be created for a small group of broadcasters locally, regionally or nationally.

"The threat of such unbalanced power is inimical to a democratic and free radio and to democracy itself.

"As for those radio news analysts who cry out that the limitations which our policies impose on them threaten freedom of speech, I think the opposite is true. For we have set aside regular broadcasting periods in which controversial issues of the day can be and are discussed first by one side, then the other. We have declined repeatedly to sell time for the discussion of these issues, so that the greater amount of time (and with it the effective control of public opinion) would not be at the disposal of the side prepared to spend the most money.

"Actually freedom of speech on the radio would be menaced if a small group of men, some thirty or forty news analysts who have nation-wide audiences and have regular broadcasting periods in which to build loyal listeners, take advantage of their 'preferred position' and become pulpiteers. To permit these men to preach their own views would be to create for CBS news a super-editorial page, instead of no editorial page at all. Then freedom of the air, within the genuine spirit of democracy, would be merely a hollow phrase. There is no sense to the idea of erecting a barricade that will protect public opinion from one-sided assault and then drilling holes in that defense whereby men in our own employ are permitted just such assault.

"Our policies are meaningless unless strictly enforced and every news editor is held accountable for their enforcement. We want CBS World News to continue to set the highest possible standards of news objectivity and to retain its leadership in public confidence."

CBS recognizes that 100 per cent achievement of these news ideals is not possible. The great importance of these policies, we feel, lies in their resolute direction, not in minor human deviation.

Sees the Light, Too Late

Richmond, Va., (A.P.).—John W. Burrell, 67, handyman, regretted today that he looked at his alarm clock yesterday morning. Burrell struck a match to see the clock, then went back to sleep and awoke later to find that the match which he believed extinguished had ignited his trousers. The trousers contained $1,058.

Army Air Forces Staff Cut Expected

A cut in Army Air Forces personnel, civilian and military, is expected to be ordered soon by the Gasser manpower board that's making a manpower utilization survey of War Department offices and installations. Lieutenant General Somervell, chief of the Army Service Forces, beat the Gasser board to the punch when he ordered a reduction of 100,000 employes. And incidentially the 100,000 weren't all civilians. It's roughly 25,000 military and 75,000 civilians. It isn't generally known, but Army Service Forces has about 325,000 Army officers and enlisted men and women assigned to it. The general policy is to replace as many of the military with civilians as possible, but still the number is huge. We hear a lot of crying about the number of civilian employes in the department while the military is generally overlooked.

KLUTTZ

WAR STORY: A captain at Fort Myer asked the new clerk in his office if she had seen a lieutenant on his staff.

"Why, the lieutenant is off duty today," the new girl replied.

"Off duty!" shouted the excited captain. "Surely the lieutenant didn't pick this day to take off?"

"Oh, yes he did," the girl said confidentally, "'cause I saw him running around with a sign on his arm that had O. D. on it."

Yes; the lieutenant was the officer of the day.

In the new manual for postoffice stenographers is listed a group of words that are often mispelled. The first word is ACKNOWLEDGEMENT. The dictionaries in this office—Webster's and Funk and Wagnalls—list the preferred spelling as ACKNOWLEDGMENT. When in doubt over spelling, the girls are told, use the dictionary . . . Under helpful hints the stenos are advised: "Not to fidget in your chair, tap your pen, or make unnecessary motion as you take dictation . . . From a War Department steno: "I'm forgetting my shorthand as I never get a chance to use it. The officer in charge of my office writes his letters in longhand and gives them to me to type." The first War Department employe here to win a cash award for a suggestion is William M. Shirah of the Chief of Staff's Office. He got $10 for a suggestion that will save up to $200 on a new type of leave form.

Fitzgerald Gets Offer

Clifford Durr, the FCC commissioner, has strong backing for the Court of Appeals vacancy but he doesn't want to leave FCC while it is under fire . . Steve Fitzgerald, who was recently promoted to the OWI high command, is debating an attractive offer from an aviation concern. . . . The Ramspeck committee will be continued despite the resignation of Chief Investigator Dillard Lassiter, who will be appointed regional director for War Manpower at Atlanta. But the personnel inquiry will be slow and unproductive for months as the committee never had a staff able to dig in and get facts. It has muffed a wonderful opportunity. Meantime, the Byrd committee is ready to steal the ball completely from the House group. It will hold open hearings on personnel problems within a few weeks and it's reported to have excellent material.

An attempt will be made in Congress soon to recreate the Bituminous Coal Division. Senator Joe Guffey will lead the Senate fight and in the House Representative Randolph of West Virginia will carry the ball. A group of coal mine operators and John L. Lewis' mine union are building up support for the bill. . . . The Budget Bureau established its first field office in Houston, Tex., last month, and it'll open up offices in San Francisco and Chicago within a few weeks. An office in Philadelphia also is under consideration. . . . Martha E. Manning has celebrated her twenty-fifth anniversary as an employe in the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the War Department. Her experience has been of untold value in training and advising the thousands of new employes in the office.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation is solving its critical manpower problem by the part-time use of several hundred Eastern and Anacostia High School students. These employes—300 of them—work two hours daily and a full day Saturday in the agency's vast fingerprint division, which is located in the National Guard Armory. Most of the students worked full-time during their summer vacation and they'll return to full tome work when they are graduated. They are paid an hourly rate based on the annual rate and its provides a good income for the students, mostly girls.

WAR BOND HIGHLIGHTS: James McVinnie, a $150-a-month WPB clerk, and Leighton G. Robinson, $110-a-month Negro chauffeur, saved 1875 pennies a piece and each put them into $25 war bonds... Maj. Gen. Philip Fleming, Federal Works administrator, gets a monthly check of $2.77. The remainder is put into war bonds. . . . A top WPB official has purchased $20,000 worth of war bonds. Another has signed up for $10,000. . . . Veterans' Administration sold $50,268 in bonds during the first two days of the drive.

District Lags, Nation Ahead In Bond Sales

Washington Still To Raise First Half of Its Quota Of 94 Millions

And now—double it.

Only 11 days are left in the Third War Loan drive and the District still has to raise half of its quota of 94 million dollars.

Washington's effort to "Back the Attack" compares unfavorably with the rest of the Nation reported by the Treasury to be buying bonds at the tune of one billion a day. Two-thirds of the 15-billion goal have already been raised, it was reported yesterday.

Among the States, New Hampshire and Rhode Island had exceeded four-fifths of their quota yesterday and neighboring Virginia is also reported over the average.

Figures of bond sales at the "Back the Attak" Army show yesterday were not available although indications are another record has been achieved at the crowded Monument Grounds. The exhibit will remain open through Sunday, September 26.

In a concerted effort to take the campaign over the top in the Nation's Capital, local radio stations will set aside entire days featuring the loan drive. Columbia's Washington outlet, WTOP, will dedicate its time to "Back the Attack" tomorrow, WWDC and WINX will devote their broadcasting time Thursday and NBC's Red Network Station, WRC, will lend its support next Monday.

John J. Payette and Carter T. Barron, cochairman of the local motion picture industry's war activities committee, announced yesterday that Treasury speakers will appear at the city's theaters durining the week to tell every individual that "your name on a small bond can mean one less name on a smalll cross."

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., in announcing that $10,239,000,000 had been subscribed nationally through Saturday, pointed out "raising this mount of money in so short a time would have seemed utterly impossible only a few months ago."

"But simply because we are on the home stretch in so short a time," the Secretary warned, "we have no right yet to throw our hats in the air and consider the job done. What is important to think about now, is not that we have sold 10 billion dollars in bonds, but that we have still five billion dollars to go, and I can assure you the last five billion will be the hardest. The 'big' money—money from corporations and insurance companies—is already in. The job of supplying the remainder of the money rests squarely on the shoulders of the American people."

Pigeons to Carry News of Bond Sales

Each day this week through Thursday, an Army jeep carrying carrier pigeons that will take to the "Back the Attack" show news of additional purchases of war bonds will tour the city.

Silver Spring, Md., at Wayne and Georgia aves., 2 p. m.

Army Private Honored for Chaplain Art

Ceremonies Mark Exhibition at Chapel Services Of 'Attack' Show

Army Pvt. Benn Lewis, whose artist's brush immortalized Army chaplains' heroic sacrifices in this war, was honored last night by chaplains and civilians of three faiths at the "Back the Attack" war show.

The service took place in the green-steepled, white frame chapel of the chaplains' exhibit, where hangs Lewis' painting depicting four chaplains of three faiths praying together on the deck of a torpedoed troopship in the North Atlantic after they gave their lifebelts to drowning enlisted men.

Brig. Gen. William R. Arnold, Army chief of chaplains, said Private Lewis represented the type of man who had "willingly and cheerfully" transferred his talents from civilian to military life, as part of his contribution toward winning the war. While not neglecting his duties as a soldier Lewis spent many extra hours in placing phases of Army life on canvas, said Chaplain Arnold.

The title of the picture in the chapel is "Greater Loce Hath No Man Than This." The four chaplains depicted are Alexander D. Goode, 5131 2d st. nw., first Jewish chaplain to die in this war; Clark V. Poling, son of the Rev. Daniel A. Poling of Christian Endeavor fame; Father John P. Washington,

Pvt. Lewis, whose home is in Riverside, N. J., was an artist with Warner Bros. Hollywood studios before entering the service. Since then he has executed portraits of most of the Army chaplains; one of James Byrnes, economic stabilization director, one of Army maneuvers in the Carolinas and several others.

Two of Private Lewis' buddies helped honor him last night. They were Pvt. Robert L. Sanchez, native of the Dominican Republic, who sang "Agnus Dei," and Lieut. John Carlin, his organ accompanist. Jewish Chaplain Bernard Segal presided; James Griffin, Negro chaplain and a Protestant, led the singing of "America" and "America, the Beautiful," and Portestant Chaplain Leighton Harrell spoke briefly. A hymn "sing" followed the testimonial program.

Chaplain Harrell estimated more than 40,000 persons witnessed the chaplain's exhibit yesterday and a total of 1000 attended the Catholic, Protestant and Jewish services.

Grade A Recapping Ceiling Set by OPA

The Office of Price Administration yesterday set maximum prices for recapping with Grade A camelback truck and bus tires in sizes smaller than 8.50-20. Reflected in the slightly higher ceilings is the change from Grade C to camelback, authorized by the War Production Board for these smaller tires.

The increase, it was said, will be offset by increased mileage.

Illustrating the price differential, OPA said the cost of recapping a size 7.00-20 bus and truck tire, with conventional tread, will be $11.80 when grade A camelback is used. The Grade C price is $11.25.

Convalescent Soldier Makes Fishing Flies at Army Show

By Emily Towe
Post Staff Writer

Pvt. Harold S. Erb, of Greeley, Colo., who slipped off to Rocky Mountain streams as a boy to fish, was absorbed yesterday in a convalescent occupation at "Back the Attack" medical corps exhibit that would measure up to any fisherman's dream.

The soldier, a patient under the care of Walter Reed Hospital as the result of a shoulder injury received last spring at Pine Camp, N. Y., was tying fishing flies from brilliant feathers shed by rare birds at the Washington Zoo.

One of a group of wounded soldiers who are restoring use of injured limbs and severely burned fingers through physical therapy, Private Erb smiled broadly when Lieut. Col. F. G. Leslie, also a confirmed fisherman, manifested interest yesterday in the delicate feathered bait that is providing exercise for the injured man. Lieutenant Colonel Leslie and Col. A. O. Haff, both of Camp Pickett, Va., direct the medical corps exhibit.

"When I was a kid, we used to go out to watch the insects so we would know just what kind of flies we wanted," Private Erb explained to the colonel. Motioning toward a large card of completed flies, he added: "Those bright feathers from the Washington Zoo are swell. If I had to hurt my shoulder, this is the best way a fisherman could ask for to get well!"

Nearby was Corpl. Josiah Bellows, 29, of 3161 18th st. nw., who lost a leg when he "got tangled up with a train in the blackout in England." He said physical therapy and massage were helping him to walk so that "before you know it, I'll be going about as if nothing had happened."

The Medical Corps exhibit includes demonstration of the treatment of simulated wounds so realistic that spectators gasp and small children ask: "Mummy, is he really dead?" Starting with a soldier crawling along the jungle terrain in camouflage uniform, the series of displays shows the man as he falls wounded and then receives first treatment from company aid men on the battlefield.

After the "wounded" soldier has been carried by litter to the battalion aid station, which in Sicily has been as close as 300 yards to the firing lines, he is given additional treatment. If the wound is serious, he is then removed to an operating room which is a tent propped up with limbs of trees at "Back the Attack Show."

Meanwhile, the soldier's record card with type of injury described is removed for Army files. Finally, the "wounded" man is taken to a tent corresponding with a hospital ward. The series is completed with demonstration of equipment in large Army hospitals similar to Walter Reed.

"I have listened with pride to this of reports to the people of America on how the various segments of our home front have 'Backed the Attack,' said Marvin Jones, War Food Administrator, last night.

Jones said the record of the American farmer this year would surpass the previous one and that the program for 1944 calls for still greater food production.

"Civilians have not gone hungry," he explained, "But if we all try to spend our extra incomes for food for ourselves we will create shortages to make it difficult for the Army to have what it needs.

"There is no shortage of war bonds," Jones said significantly.

"Spending the extra money for bonds makes the food available for our soldiers. It is another way to 'Back the Attack' on the food front. . ."

"It isn't much of a sacrifice," Dr. Peter Marshall, pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church indicated during the afternoon, "to put your money into the soundest human institution in the world today—the United States of America."

The Home Front's War

Leading the Signal Corps Day observance at "Back the Attack," Maj. Gen. H. C. Ingles, Chief Signal Officer of the Army, said this was "as much the war of the man and woman at home as the lads in the foxholes—and as much your duty to win it."

General Ingles cited some costs of signal equipment.

"You have witnessed the demonstration of the Handie-Talkie," he said, "one of the smallest and most versatile radio sets developed by the Army.

"That little handful of equipment costs $212. If only 11 of you were to walk up here and buy one $25 bond apiece, it still wouldn't pay for one of these sets.

"Yet at this moment a squad of American soldiers may hang by the slender length of that $212 worth of radio.

General Ingles told of some of the bigger radios, the powerful voice and ears of the Army by which the whole tide of battle is swung on the battle fronts where we are fighting.

"When you visit the exhibit, look at the set we call the SCR-299," he said, "built so neatly and compactly into a truck. As you look, I would like you to envision the cost—$9000.

"A lot of money when you pause to consider that in less time than it takes for me to tell you the set could be obliterated by a single bomb. It happens; and every time it happens there must be another ready instantly to take its place. Another $9000.

"Yet that set, scurrying across sands of the desert and over tortuous trails of mountains, helped bring Rommel to his knees in Africa and helped keep casualties of American forces surprisingly low in Sicily.

General Ingle's talk was one of the most informative yet given. Of a highly technical nature, it was translated by the Chief Signal Officer in a way the entire audience understood.

"The figures we must remember," he explained, "are simpler and more familiar. They are the $18.75 of the bond's we 'can't afford,' the 10 per cent of our pay that pinches the budget, the cost of things we could do without."

"In the light of that, and in the light of American blood and lives, that $9000 is really not so much."

He told of the hundreds of vehicular radios, the thousands of Handie-Talkies and the 60,000 other different items of equipment furnished by the Signal Corps to the United Nations in its function of furnishing communications for the Army.

"The complex electronic devices of this war are a far cry from the smoke signals of primitive combat. As the mobility of armies increased the need for better and longer range communications has grown apace.

"From every theater of war the demand for material and more materiel must be met. This makes mandatory the purchase of the bonds with which to buy it. It makes urgent the need for every one of us to "Back the Attack" with every nickle, dime and dollar we possess.

Following out the pattern of every preceding performance since September 9, the weather has been tailor made. With one week to go, "Back the Attack," an idea which originated in The Washington Post, already has outstripped any similar exposition in the history of the Army.

Officials believe one of the most significant aspects of the greatest of Army shows is the vast, intense and intelligent interest of the people themselves who visit the Washington Monument Grounds daily.

Tentative Schedule

If there was a doubt as to the magnitude of fighting to win a war it undoubtedly has been dispelled among those who have visited "Back the Attack."

A tenative schedule for special days with demonstrations following guardmount for the remaining duration of the Army show which was requested first by the Treasury Department in connection with the Third War Loan Drive, follows:

Monday: Mexican Civilain Band
Tuesday: Transportation Corps Day
Wednesday: Army Air Force Day
Thursday: Medical Corps Day
Friday: Army Ground Force Day (tenative)
Saturday: Chemical Warfare Day
Sunday: Army Ground Force Day (tenative)

In the meantime a number of innovations are being planned which are to be introduced throughout the coming week, Maj. John Galloway, "Back the Attack" public relations officer, said last night.

Col. H. F. Jackson Named 'V-Man' By Junior Board

Col. Harry Frederick Jackson, USA, retired, of 2415 20th st. nw., and the OCD office, 2324 F st. nw., has been named V-man of the week for outstanding service in the war effort, it was announced yesterday by the Junior Board of Commerce.

Colonel Jackson graduated from West Point in 1896 and served during the Spanish-American war on the staff of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee. He returned to civilian life in 1906 and engaged in engineering.

He volunteered for civilian defense work in January of 1942 and from that date to July, 1942, he worked 56 hours a week in the OCD. He originally was an assistant deputy air raid warden in the Kalorama rd. section but later went with headquarters. He was named assistant director in charge of protective services by Regional Director John Russell Young in July of this year. He still does considerable work in his own area.

Home-Sharing Plan Aids Thousands, FHA Says

4000 Buy Bonds to See Quiz Kids

Official Banned From Purchasing U. S. Securities Is Identified

The Quiz kids last night delivered the correct answer to one of the pressing problems of the day—how to sell war bonds. Approximately 4000 persons bought $3,350,000 in bonds to hear the youngsters in Constitution Hall.

The Kids, however, couldn't solve the problem of some score of ticket holders, who arriving after the doors were closed at 7 p. m., milled disappointedly outside exchanging verbal fisticuffs with an adamant doorman.

Guest expert on the program which was broadcast by NBC was 12-year-old Anna Maria Martins, daughter of the Ambassador from Brazil.

She broadcast a message in her native tongue, which, when she was pressed to translate, proved to be a comment on the handsomeness of 13-year-old Richard Williams, mathematics wizard of the quartet.

Fifteen-year-old Margaret Merrick said she found the gas shortage and crowding here not nearly as bad as she'd expected.

Presence of chocolate ice cream here impressed Harve Fischman, 13-year-old history expert who said he'd been led to believe there was an ice cream famine.

Gerard Darrow, 10, birds, bees and flowers authority, was pleased to find the weather not cold and rainy but just "like the good old South."

The one question that stumped the Kids was the identity of the World War I Secretary of the Treasury. All were surprised to find it was William Gibbs McAdoo.

In answer to another question, Harve was quick to point out that one national official had not bought a single war bond. The offender proved to be Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, who is forbidden by virtue of his office to invest in any U. S. security.

A short address plugging the sale of bonds was made by Maj. Gen. James A. Ulio, Adjutant General of the Army.

Oakdale Boy Dies After Bicycle And Car Collide

Stanley Powell, 11, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Aubrey Powell, Oakdale, Md., was injured fatally last night on Georgia Avenue extended at Oakdale.

The boy was riding a bicycle south on Georgia Avenue when he was struck, police said, by an automobile operated by Owen F. Wright of Kensington, Md., a Silver Spring barber.

The Rockville Rescue Squad took Stanley to Montgomery County General Hospital, where he was pronounced dead by staff physicians. A technical charge of manslaughter was placed against Wright by county police and he was released on bond for a future hearing.

Victory Sidelights

Gen. Walsh Is Rewarded For Service

Brig. Gen. Robert L. Walsh of the Army Air Forces, a native of Washington, has been awarded the Legion of Merit for "exceptionally meritorious service as assistant chief of the Air Staff, A-2, from March 9 to June 8 of last year," the War Department announced yesterday.

General Walsh was instrumental in organizing air intelligence activities of the Army Air Forces, including the establishment of training schools and the procurement of especially qualified personnel necessary in a greatly expanded service, it was said.

His wife, Mrs. Caroline T. Walsh, and two children, Susanne and Robert Walsh, jr., reside at 1345 30th st. nw.

General Walsh, now in command of the South Atlantic wing of the Air Transport Command with headquarters at Natal, Brazil, attended District public schools and was graduated in 1916 from the United States Military at West Point. Before becoming assistant chief of the Air Staff, he was intelligence officer at headquarters of Langley Field, Va.

To Add 300 to Staff

Mrs. Minnie Frost Rands of 1430 Floral st. nw., supervisor of price panel assistants for the District ration boards, plans to add 300 more housewives to her staff within the next few months.

The volunteers, to be recruited among housewives, are expected to give from two to four hours of their time each week to price-control work.

Postlude

Bales Offers Symphony Of Variations

By Ray C. B. Brown

National Gallery of Art presents on Sunday night a chamber orchestra concert directed by Richard Horner Bales. Program: Tambourin, Minuet and Gigue (Gretry), "Salomon" Symphony No. 7 in D minor and major (Haydn), Overture to "Der Freischuetz" (Weber), Guard Mount and Gypsy Dance from "Carmen" (Bizet), Irish Tune from County Derry and "Country Gardens" (Grainger), Spanish Caprice (Rimski-Korsakov).

As has been customary for many a Sunday night in the National Gallery of Art, the east garden court held last evening as many auditors as the safety laws would permit, while others were ensconed in neighboring rooms within ear-shot. The occasion was another chamber orchestra concert, under the direction of Richard Bales, the young composer and batonist of Alexandria, who has a knack in arranging the first part of a program. That was evidenced at his last concert by his juxtaposition of Gluck and Carl Bach.

This time he had the equally happy idea of putting Andre Gretry and Josep Haydn together as representatives of the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. The former was 10 years younger than the latter and outlived him by four years, while his popularity was as great in Paris as Haydn's was in Vienna and London. Gretry, however, was a self-taught composer whose scoring was so thin that a contemporary wit said that a coach-and-four could be driven between the bass and the first fiddle. This defect possibly served him as a virtue, for he made his success with numerous operas characterized by melodic facility and grace. These qualities were apparent in the tambourin, minuet and gigue that opened the concert.

Of Haydn's 104 symphonies, Bales chose the so-called "London" in D minor and major, which is one of the most familiar. It is curious that the epithet should have been applied only to the seventh of the 12 symphonies commissioned by Johann Peter Solomon and conducted in London by the composer. There is certainly nothing in it to remind one of a metropolis. On the contrary, its moods are alternately those of classical tragedy and rural merry-making. Its slow sections have dignity, and its lively parts are distinctly pastoral. Bela Bartok, who ought to know, says the main theme of the finale is identical with the Croatian folksong, "Oj Jellena."

The second part of the program had no particular plan, for it contained such popular items as Weber's overture to "Der Freischuetz," two excerpts from "Carmen," Percy Grainger's arrangement of the Irish tune from County Derry and his "Country Gardens," and Rimski-Korsakov's "Spanish Caprice."

Fanny Amstutz Roberts presents George Tolley, pianist, assisted by Dorothy Froelich, soprano, on Sunday afternoon in Phillips Memorial Gallery.

A friendly audience in Phillips Memorial Gallery yesterday afternoon gave encouragement to George Tolley, a young pianist with a good technical foundation, who is still a novice in interpretation. His inexperience, or possibly his nervousness, was evident in his hurried playing and his lack of rhythmical delineations. There were no differences of profile in his reading of Bach (F sharp major prelude and fugue), Bethoven (F major sonata, Op, 10) and Brahms (D minor capriccio from the first book of "Fantasien"). He was more at home with the moderns: Debussy's toccata, Grainger's transcription of Gabriel Faure's "Apres un Reve," one of George Gershwin preludes, and a novellette by Francis Poulenc.

Dorothy Froelich, a soprano experienced in fioriture, was the assisting artist, contributing the "Bell Song" from "Lakme," Giannini's "Tell Me, O Blue Sky," Dunhill's "The Cloths of Heaven" and two songs by Frank LaForge: "Come Unto These Yellow Sands" and "Into the light." Her voice has lightness, agility and grace in phrasing.

Randolph Seeks Early Hearing on Engraving PayRise

Representative Randolph (Democrat) of West Virginia yesterday revealed that he intended to ask for hearings as soon as posible before the Civil Service Committee on his bill to allow all employes of the Bureau of Engraving 15 per cent night differential pay.

At present, the night pay goes only to skilled workers. Randolph said his bill would bring the Engraving pay in line with that of the Government Printing Office.

He added that he also was interested in increased pay for all night workers in the Government. The statement was made to United Federal Workers of America, a CIO organization.

D.C. Churches Begin Fall Activities

Sunday Schools Resume Programs; Baptist Revival To Open on Oct. 7

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Church Editor

Washington churches yesterday buzzed with activity as the fall religious season began.

Sunday schools resumed sessions after summer vacations, pastors returned to familiar pulpits. Bible classes greeted new members and youth groups mapped plans for fall programs.

The death on Saturday of Dr. Charles E. Resser, president of the District of Columbia Sunday School Association, was mourned by laymen and clergy, especially in the Washington City Church of the Brethren, Fourth and North Carolina ave. se., where he was chairman of the board of deacons and a Sunday school teacher.

Membership Drive Stressed

The membership crusade of the District of Columbia Organized Bible Class Association was emphasized in many classes. The association has more than 15,000 members in almost 200 classes and practically all Protestant denominations.

In the spirit of a world at war, a service emblem and plaque were dedicated at Brightwood Park Methodist Church, 8th and Jefferson sts. nw., honoring the congregation's men and women in the armed forces. Dr. Horace E. Cromer, superintendent of the Washington East Methodist District, preached the sermon, and the Rev. Robert K. Nevitt, pastor, presided.

A carved wooden cross and a Christian flag were dedicated at historic Western Presbyterian Church, 1906 H st. nw., the cross memorializing Mrs. James S. Giffen and her mother, Mrs. Trilla B. Young, for many years leaders in the congregation's women's activities. The Rev. Dr. Gordon Conning, pastor of the Dickeyville Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, guest speaker, preached on "The Meaning of the Cross."

Evangelistic Campaign

The coming city-wide Baptist evangelistic drive, set for October 17-31, was stressed in many local and nearby churches of that denomination. A preparatory rally for that drive will take place September 26 at 4 p. m. at First Baptist Church, 16th and O sts. nw., where the speaker will be Dr. William Ward Ayer, New York City pastor and evangelist.

Concluding sessions of the annual District Christian Endeavor Society conference were held at Chevy Chase Baptist Church, Western ave., near Chevy Chase Circle.

Of special Catholic interest was the golden jubilee celebration of St. Cyprian's Catholic Church, 13th and C sts. se. (See separate story.)

Baked apples served with peanut-drop cookies as pictured here make a dessert zippy with vitamins and minerals. These can both be baked in the oven at the same time since the baking temperatures are the same. Serve the apples with cream or fruit juice

Vitamin and mineral "zip" is something to be desired in the food we eat. You don't have to look far to find foods which rate high as a pleasing combination of good food value.

Peanut drop cookies are on the honor roll when it comes to providing good flavor and good health. Enriched flour, shortening, sugar, eggs, milk and peanuts rate high in food value. Serve these cookies with baked apples and you will have vitamins and minerals galore in the diet.

So simple is the making of these cookies that children find them fun to prepare. Consider these luscious bits for mailing to Johnny at camp. Include these cookies too in the lunch boxes which must be carried to work or school.

Baked apples can vie with these cookies in their food value. Select the variety that will bake and let loose all your artistry in achieving those which are as pretty to look at as they are good to eat.

Apples are baked in a hot oven, in a moderate oven and in a very slow oven with results that seem to be equally satisfactory to cooks and their victims. The directions given today are for baking them in a hot oven.

Since the cool days have come appetites are keener. A thrifty delicious main dish can be Braised Short Ribs of Beef with Vegetables. With this as the main dish and baked apples and peanut cookies with which to sign off the meal, let's plan a dinner menu:

Dinner Menu

Chilled Tomato Juice
Braised Short Ribs
Boiled Potatoes
Carrot-Cabbage Salad
Enriched Bread Butter
Baked Apples Peanut Cookies
Coffee Milk

Two pounds of beef short ribs will serve four persons adequately. Here is the recipe for preparing them with vegetables:

BRAISED SHORT RIBS

Cut short ribs into individual squares and flour them. Brown slowly on all sides in 2 tablespoons fat, allowing 2 to 30 minutes for browning. Add 2 teaspoons salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, ½ minced onion and ½ cup water. Cover closely and simmer for 2 hours. Add 2 carrots, cut in quarters or into serving pieces, ½ green pepper and 2 sticks of celery cut into pieces. Cook for 30 to 40 minutes more. Remove the meat to serving platter, thicken the vegetable gravy with 1 tablespoon flour stirred into ½ cup water.

BAKED APPLES

Wash and core 4 large, firm apples. Pare only the upper fourth of each apple. Place them in a baking dish. Fill each center with about 1 tablespoon sugar (brown or white), 1-4 teaspoon butter or margarine. Nut meats may also be added if desired. Pour into the baking dish, 1 tablespoon water for each apple. Cook the apples, uncovered in a hot oven, 400 degrees until they are tender. Baste them frequently. Thirty minutes is usually sufficient cooking time.

PEANUT DROP COOKIES

Cream together 1-2 cup shortening and 1 cup sugar. Add 2 beaten eggs. Blend thoroughly. Sift together, 2 cups sifted enriched flour, 2 teaspoons baking powder and 1-2 teaspoon salt. Add alternately with 1-4 cup milk to creamed mixture. Add 1 1-2 cups chopped peanuts. Mix only enough to blend ingredients. Drop by teaspoonfuls on greased baking sheet. Bake in moderately hot oven, 400 degrees for about 10 minutes. Yield: About 8 dozen 1 1-2 inch cookies.

More Sleep, Less Weight Cuts Blood Pressure

By Logan Clendening, M.D.

CORRESPONDENTS often write me for a cure for high blood pressure. There is no such thing as a cure, only a prolonged period of management.

The remedies which have been recommended from time to time include mistletoe, garlic, watermelon seeds and half a hundred others. Whenever you find that many remedies recommended for a condition, you have a pretty good idea that none of them are any good. The old idea of a strict diet with no meat has also been given up as producing no really noticeable results.

There is no use making a person acutely uncomfortable by taking away things that have become a habit with him because the management of a case looks forward to a long pull, even to the end of life, and if the doctor sets too high a standard the patient will not live up to it.

For some reason to which I have not been made privy, most people with high blood pressure are overweight. I do not think the overweight is the cause of high blood pressure because one sees a certain number of quite thin people with good, substantial, booming pressures.

Reducing Helpful

If overweight is present, however, the first step in management is to attempt to reduce it. This does not necessarily lower the blood pressure much, but it is common sense because weight reduction lowers the strain on the heart muscle. Pulling 230 pounds upstairs is more work on the heart than pulling 180 and by just that much, multiplied by the total movements of the day, does weight reduction help.

Early to bed, even if not early to rise, is another rule of management. Ten hours out of the 24 in bed, whether one sleeps or not is just so many hours of relaxing instead of tensing all the parts of the circulation. A nap after lunch is also a good rule. If one gets used to it, it will not interfere with the sleep at night.

If not a nap, several periods of complete relaxation a day will do wonders. Lying down with something over the body to keep warm, in a quiet room with no distractions, the muscles relax one by one—the neck, face, shoulder girdle, arms and legs. Don't have the radio on and don't try to read.

Effect of Drugs

Drugs have little or no place in the management of high blood pressure. Sedatives may occasionally be needed, but not too often. If the individual is accustomed to a cocktail or highball before dinner, it will do him no harm to continue; in fact, it itself has a relaxing effect.

Tobacco is a somewhat different matter. It causes spasm of the arteries, and is just the opposite to relaxing. If the individual has been in the habit of smoking a good deal it is unwise to take him off altogether, but he should cut down on it.

Long vacations and long weekends are advisable. In fact, this management would be a good plan for nearly everybody over 55, no matter what his blood pressure.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

A good many nutritionists—I am among them—almost whisper whenever they talk about vitamin concentrates. American ingenuity runs so to shortcuts that we are afraid you might be tempted to take a vitamin in lieu of the right food.

Any day you skip breakfast, grab a sandwich for lunch and don't do too well by yourself nutritionally at dinner, then pop a vitamin pill into your mouth with the idea of making up for it all, you are that much closer to malnutrition. The scientists are modest people. They freely admit nature knows more than they do and will tell you there are many factors in food that have not been put into concentrates.

Even the entire list of vitamin concentrates is no cure-all. What you want first is an adequate diet—a diet that meets your needs. The recommended allowances of the food essentials are based on the normal needs of the individual. There may be some reason why you need more of a particular vitamin. In that case, the concentrates are of inestimable value.

It is possible that you need more than the usual amounts of vitamin A. If you are always catching colds and invariably have one in the fall, see if you can't ward it off by taking extra amounts of vitamins A and D in concentrated form. You can get these two vitamins in haliver oil, codliver oil, and in their concentrates. Of course, you need the food sources, too. You should have a green leafy or yellow vegetable, an egg and two glasses of whole milk every day. Besides vitamins, these foods furnish minerals and protein. If you eat the foods rich in the vitamin, then take the concentrates for A and D, you build up a safety margin that should protect you. Needless to say, you can't sit around in a draft, or with damp feet, or get overly tired, or you will still catch cold, vitamins or no.

Most diets are low in the B vitamins, the ones so important to steady nerves and good muscle tone. The natural food that is highest in the B vitamins is yeast—not baker's moist yeast but dried brewer's yeast, either in powdered form or in the B complex concentrate. Because of their effect on muscle tone, the B vitamins are very important to proper elimination. They help the muscles to function as they were intended to. Other good food sources are whole grain and enriched bread and cereals, milk, the meat organs, and green vegetables.

You are assured of having enough vitamin C in your diet by including a citrus fruit like orange juice or grapefruit juice or tomatoes. You need one or the other every day, plus some other raw food. Cooking destroys this vitamin. Be sure you get it daily for it is necessary to a high level of positive health.

Lady With A Problem

DEAR RUTH GREGORY: I have a problem which is becoming quite a serious one and is completely ruining my disposition along with making me very self-conscious.

I am 5-feet 3-inches tall and wear a size 24½ dress, 44 slip, 42 girdle or foundation and 7-C shoe. I am 33 years of age and have a very youthful face. I work for a large cocnern as office manager and take care of my home and family which consists of my small daughter and husband. Naturally I do not have a great deal of time for shopping.

When I go in a store and ask for my size dress I am immediately shown something suitable for my grandmother or else told where I can buy a youthful dress to the tune of $29 or $39 which is beyond my price for a working dress. I am looking for dresses around $10.95 or $12.95.

You see such beautiful slips in size 34 or 36 for $2.95, but try and buy one size 44. If you are unfortunate enough to wear that size you must make up your mind to wear plain tailored slips without a bit of beauty and usually at that; higher than your slimmer sisters would pay for one.

When it comes to a foundation garment, well you might just as well resign yourself to a heavy inner belt whether you want it or not because that's what you are shown. When I purchased my last one I walked the streets for ten days on my lunch hour before I found one I considered light in weight and pretty too. When I finally found one at my price the saleslady advised me to buy two as they were the last ones in my size and she did not expect to get any more. So I bought two at $15 each to keep from having to go through that experience soon again.

But now for the crowning insult. Try and buy a size 6½ or 7-C shoe that is light in weight and smart looking. Two of our leading F Street stores came right out and said they carried no C width shoes. So six days were spent in that hunt for a smart looking Cuban heel, soft shoe.

Surely I am not the only woman in Washington with this problem.

Very truly yours, MARY ADAMS.

By Ruth Gregory

WE DON'T have the time to play "shopping boy" for problem figure readers. But, once in a while, when a letter like this comes along that presents a challenge, we'll take time out and pick up the gauntlet.

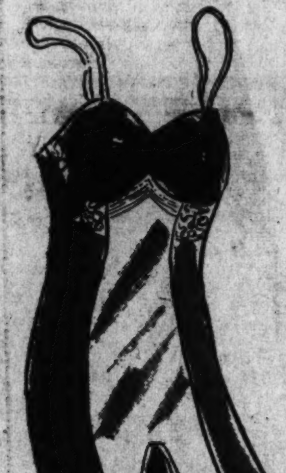
Mrs. Adams' plaint, judging from the number of inquiries we've received, isn't unique. There are hundreds of Mrs. Adamses in Washington with similar problems. That's why we combed the town in her behalf. This is what we found:

Dresses:

Generally speaking, Mrs. Adams' can consider herself lucky if she even finds a dress that is "suitable for her grandmother." Large-size dresses are scarce as hen's teeth in practically all the stores in the price range that she can afford. However, we did find two or three exceptions to that rule. And the rayon gabardine coat-dress sketched is the prize exception. It's a very trim youthful looking dress and is available in sizes 18½ to 24½. The styling is identical with that found in many a junior department. It comes in new fall shades—blue, natural, toast, and green, and is just under $11.

Foundation Garments:

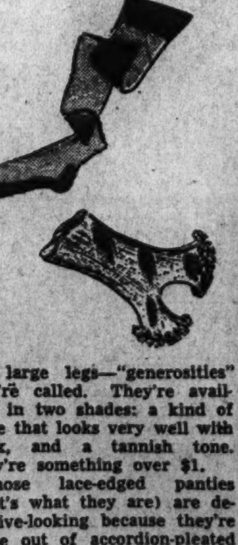
And this is one of those rubber shortage problems that's affected all female figures, whether they be junior or matron. And we do believe that in the barrel-scraping, the larger figure has the edge. We found foundations in several places that you wouldn't have to "resign yourself" to. The one sketched has genuine elastic panels, elastic garters all the way around, and a reinforced lace uplift bra.



Furthermore, it's especially designed for the short, heavy figure. For less than $8, this garment is a real find—we've seen some not as fine as this for over $10.

Panties and Hose:

Mrs. Adams didn't ask for these, but we happened on them in our rounds and thought they belonged in this story. Those rayon stockings are designed for large legs—"generosities" they're called. They're available in two shades: a kind of beige that looks very well with black, and a tannish tone. They're something over $1.



Those lace-edged panties (that's what they are) are deceptive-looking because they're made out of accordion-pleated rayon jersey. Means that the large size (they come in medium and large) will expand to accommodate a 44 if need be. They're very dainty-looking and come in pale blue, pink, and maize (also one polka-dot). About 50 cents a pair.

Slips and Gowns:

Guess Mrs. Adams just hit the wrong stores here. Because we found a pretty good assortment of nice slips in at least four stores. Our pick of the lot was the jacquard crepe with its small, all-over floral pattern and edged with delicate tatting. It comes in white or tearose, in sizes 42-46, and is just under $3. (We found some pretty, lace-trimmed rayon satin ones, too, for the same price. If you want to know, we'll tell you where).

Gowns weren't a "disposition ruining" problem, either. One of the sweetest gowns we found (and we did find quite a variety) was this one sketched. That "sweetheart neckline" is very fetching. It's made in a good quality rayon crepe in several pastel shades—blue, tearose, maize, and is under $4. (We can tell you about a charming, lace-trimmed one, too.)

Shoes:

It's true what Mrs. Adams says about some of the shoe stores—women who wear C-width shoes are given the brush-off. But we found three department stores who don't do it. Those shoes which are sketched on the figure, for instance, are "smart-looking, Cuban-heeled, and soft." In addition to these style points, they're specially constructed with inner supports—ideal for women of weight. These come in black or brown suede and in a full size range (plenty of C-widths, too).

The shoe sketched by itself is another beauty. It's available even in D-widths. That's contrasting faille against suede, black or brown, with a perky faille bow. (This same style with the same fine inner support features is also available in patent leather and in calf.) Both of these shoes, the one on the figure and this one, are just under $7.

Now, we won't guarantee to answer everybody's problem—not enough legs in this department. But if, as in Mrs. Adams' case, your particular shopping experiences are typical ones, we'll see what we can do about it.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

We should express consistently by our behavior the attitude that mealtimes must be pleasant. If we do we will have less trouble interesting children in meals. Too often the effort of parents to get children to eat disliked foods or all of everything served to them make the whole ceremony a battle rather than a pleasant diversion in the day.

Mrs. B. writes her only daughter will be 4 in October. "She is a healthy child, usually good-tempered, but very stubborn. She always has been a rather fussy eater but lately we have trouble at every meal. I have well-balanced meals and my husband and I eat everything that is prepared as a good example for her.

"At every meal there is something she will not eat. She firmly announces, 'I won't eat my dinner.' When it is fruit or vegetables, which she has always liked, and I tell her she must eat them, she says, 'No, I won't.'

"I have tried spanking her and sometimes she'll eat her dinner, but I do not exactly believe in spanking a child at each meal. I have tried saving the food and some times after three or four meals she will eat it. But this irregularity and missing her meals doesn't do her any good. She is hungry, what would you suggest."

That you give her some leeway in expressing her dislikes without punishment and that you be not so determined to get your way. You arouse antagonism and force the child to fight for her rights, by your own stubborn stand.

When she says, "I don't want any dinner," say lightly, "That's up to you. If you don't want to eat leave the table."

When she refuses a vegetable tell her that all of you take a little of everything on your plates and you want to treat her the same. Ignore it if she fails to eat it.

You highlight her behavior and make it exciting by your attention to it. Pretend not to notice whether she is or is not eating and failure to eat will lose all profit. You can never make mealtimes or food enjoyable so long as you make a child self-conscious about every mouthful. Just try enjoying yourself at a meal and see if it won't influence the child's own pleasure in it.

Our leaflet, "Poor Appetites," may help to determine why any child would have a chronic aversion to food. It may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Her Husband, Who Loves Every Living Creature, Offends Wife's Bosom Friend, a Single Girl, By His Playful Embraces; How Gently Curb Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Mine is a small problem and should take only a little space in your column. I was planning to have my girl friend, who is single, go up to my parents' home with my husband and me for a weekend, during our vacation. At the last minute, she tells me she is not going; and she gives as a reason, the fact that my husband,—both when I am around and when I am not,—playfully puts his arm around her, pats her on the head, etc.

I know he does so in the same exuberant, friendly manner that he would show to any living creature;—just as he would toward a child or a dog, for instance. Of course Jane is not a child or a dog; and while she knows my husband means no harm, she just doesn't like such breezy treatment from a man. She is sensitive that way. The question is: How can I bring to the attention of my open, honest, sweet, friendly husband the fact that young women,—however close friends of mine they may be,—are not to be treated so informally? I don't want to hurt his feelings.

Maybe other women reading this letter will sneer and say my husband is just a wolf at heart. I know this is not so. He is a truly good man, yet not a prig; with a completely decent mind and a wholesome, affectionate disposition. Have you any suggestions?

H. N. W.

Girl Friend's Plaint Is Rudely Impertinent

DEAR H. N. W.: In my opinion, the fundamentally wise way to handle the "problem" posed by your girl friend's rudely impertinent criticism (for such it is) of your husband's behavior, is to promptly and graciously cancel your invitation to her to spend a weekend, in his company and yours, at your parents' home. In bluntly giving you this reason (honest though it may be, from her angle), for not wanting to accept your hospitable offer, it seems to me she has confronted you with the ethical necessity,—since you loyally sympathize with and completely trust your husband's purity of heart,—of immediately showing a kindly readiness to relieve her of the privileged status of family friend.

Her avowed attitude toward your husband is one of resentment and distrust. She has plainly told you that his exuberantly fond manners offend her. In other words, she is allergic to him. He makes her uncomfortable,—an unfortunate reaction on her part which, so far as one can see, simply has its roots in her temperamental incapacity to read his motives aright. And here let me break off to say that we must certainly concede to the girl the right to abide by the dictates of her most fastidious instincts, in relation to men.

Wife's Generous Attitude Is Highly Commendable

Since her reaction to your husband's capers is unfavorable and defensive, I think she should by all means avoid him. I have no quarrel with her impulse in that regard. But it does occur to me that if her aversion to his innocent playfulness were animated by genuinely fastidious personal feelings,—and not by a kind of rigidly self-righteous, sex-conscious prudery,—she would have contrived with unobtrusive delicacy to find some tactful escape from her dilemma. We can hardly assume her to be a person of fine sensibilities, inasmuch as she has, with crude deliberation, put you on the defensive with regard to your well-meaning husband's breezy behavior.

And now to come back to my main thought. Your confident championship of your husband's thorough decency, your stout and generous understanding of his ebulliently affectionate nature (which expansively embraces every living creature in sight), are highly commendable. And they should constitute the foundation stones of your philosophy in treating with your girl friend's impertinent and petty complaint against him. According to the civilized code, the very fact that he is your husband automatically entitles him to your full and partisan advocacy, when he is thus meanly assailed by an outsider. And the fact that you know him to be thoroughly deserving of such advocacy,—because experience has taught you he is "a truly good man,"—doubly cinches your wifely duty to ignore the girl's complaint, as unworthy of a moment's serious consideration by sensible people.

Fifth-Wheel Crony Usually Makes Trouble

If a flawlessly amiable relationship with your husband doesn't mean more to you than any "boscm friendship" with some single girl could, you really aren't mature enough in mind and spirit to be married. Almost invariably, it makes for trouble of one kind or another, for a wife to try to keep one foot in the marriage camp, so to speak, and the other in the camp of the "single girl" crony. So, in taking your girl pal's impertinence to heart, my suggestion is to take it at its true significance, namely: As warning that it is more than high time to ease her out of the role of inseparable companion, if you value your happy home. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

V-Women

(This column today presents its own list of summer's outstanding V-women.)

MRS. LUCRETIA STAUNCH—She faithfully kept up her collecting and squashing of tin cans to aid the winning of the war even after her cleaning woman quit, after she took a roomer in the guest room, and after most of her neighbors had decided it was "simply too hard work in this unbearable weather." She never weakened and threw away a single can thinking to herself," "Oh well, it's only one and it won't be missed and nobody else is doing it but me, and I'm always the sucker, and anyway I'm tired and I'm going to look after No. 1 for a change."

MRS. CLEMENTINE STRONG—She stayed home all summer and didn't consider herself a martyr for so doing. She refused a tempting invitation for the weekend fearing she would occupy a seat on bus or train while a serviceman stood. She did not tell anyone it was the first summer she had ever spent in town. She didn't droop her lips and whimper, "I've just worked so hard all summer and gone through so much that I think I'm entitled to a nice trip." She didn't brag all summer about staying home and then weaken at the end and slip over to Atlantic City for a few days.

MRS. HILDEGARDE GRITT—She was on hand at her Red Cross sewing group the day the mercury went to 98 degrees and the humidity was close on its heels. She stayed with her job for Civilian Defense even after her mother-in-law arrived for a visit, her daughter decided to get, married and demanded a wedding and her husband got a case of poison ivy. She kept her word to help out at the USO canteen when the bus service was curtailed and she had to walk six blocks to a carline in order to be on time.

MRS. ABIGAIL PLODD—When her garden dried up, and her tomatoes scorched, and her beans shriveled, she never once was heard to whine to anybody how hard she had worked all summer and how many calluses and blisters she had suffered "all for nothing." She checked it all up to experience and blithely bought a few bushels of vegetables and went to canning. She also got out last spring's garden catalogues and began to make her plans for planting early enough next season to get the benefit of the spring rains.

MRS. ELOISE FIRM—She looked over her last fall clothes and decided that with a little rejuvenation and a few new accessories they would do. She even admitted to herself truthfully there was nothing she absolutely needed, AND—she did not weaken when she saw the shop window displays, or the pictures in the fashion magazines, or when all her friends began talking about what they were going to get, and whispering the warning that stocks were getting scarce, prices going up, that anything was likely to happen, and if she were really smart she'd get stocked up for a few years after the duration.

MISS OCTAVIA ODD—The day the effects of the withholding tax appeared on her check she was the one and only woman in her office who did not squeal to high heaven that she would not be able to live on the remainder, that by the time everything was taken out of her wages there was nothing left, and she might as well quit work, that nobody was going to tell her what to do with her money and that things in this country were getting as bad as in Germany. And to those who did, she had the nerve to reply that they were darned lucky to get off this easy, and still luckier to live in a country where they had the luxury of crabbing.

MRS. MINERVA STRAIGHT—She heroically refused the offers of meat coupons from friends who got their meals in restaurants on the ground that both she and they were consuming their shares and had no right to more. She turned down the offer of an extra No. 18 shoe coupon because she could get along without it. She refused the grocer's offer to let her have something of which she was a few coupons short. She refused to drive her car downtown to take visiting Cousin Ella to the movies even though they were going to stop at a shoe-repair shop on the way. Considered a blue nose by many of her easy-going friends, she did not weaken under their derision and try to prove herself a good fellow by cheating Uncle Sam a trifle when his back was turned.

Miss Verner Is Bride of J. G. Korner

In the Washington Cathedral last night at 8 o'clock, Miss Jean McKee Verner became the bride of Ensign Jules Gilmer Korner 3d, USNR.

Officiating at the ceremony was Canon R. A. Lucas, and a reception followed at the home of the bridegroom's parents.

In the absence of her father, who is in Buenos Aires, the bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Morris Scott of Pittsburgh. She was attired in a gown of ivory satin, designed on princess lines, the neckline bound with seed pearls. Her heirloom veil of ivory illusion was train length and held with a tiara of lace and she carried a bouquet of orchids and setphanotis. Her only attendant was Miss Helen Moore of St. Louis and Miami. Her costume was of ice blue faille and she carried talisman roses. Mr. Korner was best man for his son.

At the reception which followed the bride's mother received guests attired in a black lace gown over dusty rose crepe and Mrs. Korner wore an ice blue satin.

After a ten-day wedding trip, the couple will make their home at the bridegroom's new station. The bride is a graduate of St. Mary's Hall in Texas, and Finch Junior College. For the past few years she has made her home in Buenos Aires, having come to Washington with her mother a few weeks ago for her wedding. Ensign Korner attended St. Alban's School and is a graduate of the University of Virginia.

Designing College Girl Toys Is Hobby Of Pert, Teen-Ager Elizabeth Daniels

Granddaughter of Josephus Daniels Makes Green Dragons In Her Spare Time, but Has an Eye on a Reporting Job

By Peggy Preston

"I bad-dreamed them."

Pert, imaginative Elizabeth Daniels, daughter of the administrative assistant to the President and Mrs. Jonathan W. Daniels, has reference to her handiwork . . . those college-girl toys that abound in the Daniels' home on Garfield ave.

Callers at the Daniel menage are apt to discover a curly pink octopus curving a toe around an armchair, or a seagreen dragon waving calico horns from behind the piano. There is no need to reach for the nearest asparin, however, for a second glance reveals that they are friendly little characters, the brain-babies of 17-year-old Elizabeth, eldest of the four Daniels girls.

As a matter of fact, these "dreamed-up" animal toys don't tarry long in the Daniels household. A local art studio is snatching up all that the busy young creator has time to make.

The trouble is that Elizabeth, who says designing is merely a hobby with her, can't find time right now to fill her orders. Just back from a summer camp in Maine, she will be off the end of this week to begin her senior year at Ashley Hall in Charleston, S. C.

Once there she will do exactly what one might expect from the granddaughter of the newspaper-publishing, one-time Secretary of the Navy and former diplomat, Josephus Daniels . . . she will edit the school paper.

Already the reputation of the famous newspapering name she bears has been put to the test with young Elizabeth, and she proudly reports that she has won the first round.

Because of war shortages it was decided to discontinue the school publication at Ashley Hall this year. "They said," explains Elizabeth, "'You're the editor, ha ha, and there isn't going to be any paper.'" And she retorted with "'All right, so I'm the editor, ha ha, and there is going to be a paper.'"

Forthwith she set about to locate and buy a mimeograph machine. Two days ago, she finally tracked one down, slightly beat up and very second-handish, she admits, but Ashley Hall is now going to have a newspaper this year, war or no war.

Designing is strictly secondary with the pretty, brown-haired Elizabeth. Her long-range view is for a reporting job, perhaps on her family's News and Observer in Raleigh, N. C. That will have to come later though. Next year there will be college to cope with, and right now it is a toss up between Vassar and Smith. "Daddy will probably decide," she reflects. "He always does."

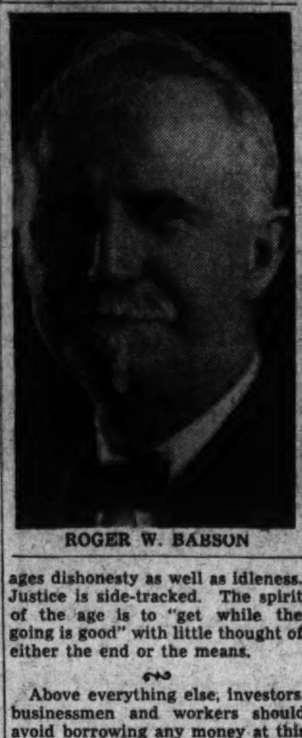
Growing 'Epidemic'

By Roger W. Babson

Inflation Is Your Business

Inflation is as "catching" as smallpox and much more serious. If allowed to spread, it will cause far more deaths than epidemics of suicides, heart failures and nervous breakdowns. No wonder life insurance companies are fighting it tooth and nail. If the same intelligent approach is made to the problem of avoiding inflation as was made in the case of reducing and eliminating smallpox, we shall be all right. But if we neglect the present signs of the growing epidemic of inflation I am afraid we shall soon be beyond hope.



ROGER W. BABSON

Some people are saying, "Let inflation come." They hope it will help sell some long-held stocks which now show a loss. Possibly, but what will the money received be worth? It may be far better to hold stocks than to sell them at double the present price and get money worth only 40 per cent or less of its present value. The same principle applies to buying stocks now with the hope of selling them later at a profit. Even when buying the right stocks as an inflation hedge, they should be considered only as a "safe deposit box" in which to keep your money during inflation. What money you do not put into short-term war bonds, invest in good, productive real estate or good stocks. Do this as a permanent investment and not as a speculation.

Readers who have a little money invested in railroads, public utilities and other companies whose rates are regulated should especially watch inflation. Inflation can severely cripple these corporations. Although rate increases are possible they always lag considerably behind the increase in expenses caused by inflation. Inflation will, therefore, probably cause a decline in the securities of railroads and certain other corporations.

It is true that some (not all) wages should go up under inflation, but what good will this do? Not only will these higher wages buy less in food, clothing and shelter, but as wages rise, employers will hire fewer people. This means that inflation will result in unemployment. The older ones and the less efficient will be dumped first; then the higher paid will be let go and so unemployment will increase.

As unemployment increases, purchasing power will decrease. When retailers have fewer orders, manufacturers may be compelled to discharge their workers. Then we shall have another depression. This may not come until around 1950, but it certainly may be a bad one when it does come. Its severity will depend upon the extent of the preceding period of inflation. Hence, we all have a selfish interest in helping to stave off inflation.

Inflation may hit the middleman hard. The well-to-do will have enough "fat" to carry them through the next depression. The poor will be supported by the Government or have artificial employment through another WPB. The middle-class people, however, are out of luck. They will not have enough capital to carry them through the inflation period or will not be poor enough for Government support. Small businessmen feel they are suffering terribly now, but if we enter real inflation their condition will be much more difficult. Periods of inflation result in great increases in bankruptcy. These cases are almost wholly among the middle classes, especially small manufacturers, small retailers and the white-collar group in general.

Crime and misappropriation of funds increase during inflation. Speculation becomes rampant. Under such conditions, all business becomes more hazardous. Manufacturers and merchants then depend upon rising prices for their profits rather than on honest merchandising. Speculation develops a disregard for religion. This, in turn, undermines the entire business structure. Inflation encourages dishonesty as well as idleness. Justice is side-tracked. The spirit of the age is to "get while the going is good" with little thought of either the end or the means.

Above everything else, investors, businessmen and workers should avoid borrowing any money at this time. We should all take a lesson from railroad and corporation managements who have taken advantage of the current period of good business to reduce their bonded indebtedness. They are getting in shape to attempt weathering any depression that may lie ahead.

Some businessmen think they can profit from inflation by borrowing good dollars now and paying back in bad dollars later. Very few can possibly succeed with such a program. Their business and investments will probably turn out so poorly that these men will be unable to get even enough bad dollars to pay the interest on their loans and the taxes on their property. Doubtless, too, there will be legislation making such sharp practices illegal.

P. S.—In my release of August 30 titled, "Jobs After the War," I should have stated that discharged servicemen must apply to their former employers within 40 days rather than within a 60-day period as mentioned. Also, officials of the Selective Service System have stated that the WAVES, SPARS, WACS and Marine women have the same reemployment rights.

Marine Receives Hero's Welcome, Boosts Bond Sale

Somerville, N. J., Sept. 19 (AP).—Sergt. John Basilone, United States Marine Corps, winner of the Congressional Medal of Honor for killing 38 Japanese on Guadalcanal, received a hero's welcome today by more than 20,000 townspeople of Somerville and Raritan.

The marine was presented with $5000 in war bonds in a colorful ceremony at Duke Farms, estate of Doris Duke Cromwell. The welcoming throng backed the attack in the Third War Loan by buying more than $1,300,000 worth of war bonds.

The shy marine, son of an Italian-born tailor, said, upon being presented the gift of war bonds, "I want to say one thing and that is for all my buddies in the front lines that they really appreciate everything you people are doing by backing the attack and buying war bond."

Submarine Financed By 3d War Loan Funds

Groton, Conn., Sept. 18 (AP).—The submarine Gabilan, the second undersea fighter to be launched here in as many weeks, slid down the Electric Boat Co.'s ways today with the distinction of having been financed exclusively by funds from Connecticut's Third War Loan Drive goal.

The ship was sponsored by Mrs. Jules James, wife of Rear Admiral James, USN, commandant of the Sixth Naval District, Charleston, S. C. She is a niece of Mrs. Henry L. Stimson, wife of the Secretary of War.

New Rumors Of Nazi-Soviet Peace Heard

By Alice-Leone Moats

Copyright, 1943, New York Tribune, Inc.

Madrid, Sept. 19.—For more than a year now, whenever the picture has looked dark for Germany, the Nazis have started a rumor that they might sign a separate peace with Russia. Spain has always been used as a sounding board for such rumors, and once more they are being circulated in Madrid. Yesterday, there was a very interesting article in "Arriba," sent by its Berlin correspondent and headed "radical change in war's conduct rumored in Berlin."

The idea, says the correspondent, that there exists along the Polish frontier a secret fortified line, on the order of the German west wall, or Sigfried Line, already has suddenly begun to spread in Germany. Official explanations of German retreats in Russia, he says, no longer mention elastic tactics; and, therefore, people have come to believe that another solution has been found.

Todt's Trip Recalled

At the conclusion of the German campaign in Poland, the late Dr. Fritz Todt, builder of the German west wall, was sent to Poland and put part of his labor army to work there. It was reported in Berlin at the time that the Germans were building an east wall, or eastern counterpart of the Siegfried Line. Dr. Todt was killed in an air accident, February 8, 1942.

The theory is that the Germans will retire behind this secret line which forms a wall closing Russia off from Europe. There they will dig in to await the possible opening of a "second front." Then, protected by the Todt fortifications, and renouncing the Russian campaign, they will be able to hurl the bulk of their forces against other enemies.

The "Arriba" correspondent makes it clear that this theory has arisen unexpectedly, and with no basis on official statements. Still, there is no way of judging whether the rumor was of spontaneous origin or whether it was started by Nazi officials to worry the Allies.

A Peace Choice

Spanish and other neutrals returning from visits to Germany all came back with the impression that, somehow, the Nazis are going to find a way to put an end to the Russian campaign; although none has suggested the possibility of German armies holding a fortified line along the old Polish frontier.

The significant point they make is that while previously, there has been talk of a separate German peace with the Soviet Union, it always has been understood that this would be a compromise peace of some kind. Now that the Germans have a new line, their new east wall, some neutrals think that even when the Nazis see the "handwriting on the wall," they will be able to choose between surrender to the Soviet Union and surrender to the western Allies, and that the choice will be the Soviet Union.

London to Retain Many Rare Books Donated in Drive

Copyright, 1943, Washington Post and New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Sept. 19.—Many rare books were found among the 50,000,000 turned in for the national book recovery and salvage campaign here. The rare books will be preserved in the nation's archives. Most of the other volumes will go to the armed forces.

Five thousand experts examined the contributions. Among the rare volumes was a first edition of Kipling's "Letters of Marque," of which only 1000 were published and all but 100 destroyed. Also there was a first edition of George Bernard Shaw's "My Answers," of which 62 copies were privately printed, and British secret service records of the Napoleaonic wars, including a report on the French army's retreat from Moscow in 1812.

School Lunch Program Calls For U.S.-Aid Meals for 5 Million

By Christine Sadler

Post Staff Writer

The Nation's largest school lunch program—its first freed from the stigma of "relief"—is going into operation this autumn to provide Federal-aid meals to at least five million children.

With 50 million dollars in Government funds behind it, compared to a peak of 29 million dollars in any other year, the program will be augmented by more State money, more local tax levies, and more community participation than at any time since the "revolutionary" idea was first tried out during the middepression years.

Also, the children will be served better meals, as all must meet the nutrition requirements set in a series of three menus planned by experts of the Food Distribution Administration, the Federal agency in charge of the project.

Type "A" lunch planned by FDA is about the same as the special lunch served in Government cafeterias here and will provide from one-third to one-half of a day's nutritive requirements. Type "B" is built around the same foods, but smaller portions will be served. Type "C" calls only for a half pint of "fresh whole milk."

The Federal Government's contribution toward each of the meals is 9, 6, and 2 cents, respectively.

In some areas, due to an overall "tight" situation brought on by the war, milk may not always be available this year—a weakness not experienced in the school lunch program formerly. While hoping for the best, FDA will aid in no-milk lunches when the fluid cannot be secured. Two cents will be subtracted from the Federal contribution for each milkless meal served.

All schools or nurseries receiving Federal aid must run their lunch programs on a nonprofit basis, make meals available free to children not able to buy them.

The Office of Price Administration has liberalized its provisions covering rationed foods served in the lunch programs, permitting schools to take full advantage of canning programs and gifts of canned fruits and vegetables. No more than 10 per cent of the point ration allowance will be taken for any one canned food. This permits a school canning its full supply of four vegetables, for instance, still to have 60 per cent of its ration points to purchase other processed necessities.

Roy Murphy, director of the school lunch program for FDA, declared yesterday this change in the point procedure would have an appreciable effect on the nutritive value of meals served as community canning projects this summer have been extensive.

A complete picture of the number of schools participating in the program and types of menus selected has not yet been received at the national office, but advance reports show the Southeastern States are cooperating with the most widespread projects and that many States are wholeheartedly tackling the school-lunch problem. Utah, for instance, is this year putting its liquor taxes into the lunch fund, and several States are making a real effort to meet the needs of war industry centers by providing lunch for the children of working mothers.

CIO Leader Flays Low Salaries for Public Employes

Cleveland, Sept. 19 (AP).—State, county and city governments must make "a complete re-valuation of their wage structures" if they are to continue operating in wartime, Abram Flaxer of New York, national president of the CIO State, County and Municipal Workers of America, declared tonight.

"State, county and city employes are the lowest paid group in the country," he asserted in an interview. "Until wage stabilization they were 10 to 25 per cent below the averages in industry. For that reason the Little Steel Formula did not bring them to a level that would allow them to live decently.

"Officials have tried various plans of bonuses, cost of living increases and so forth, but they did not work. Public service employes are leaving their jobs in droves to take war jobs at higher wages. I cannot see how the local governments can continue to function with the cut in employes. In two years the number of such employes has dropped 200,000 in the United States."

U. S. Must Prepare To Share Its Food, Roosevelt Says

New York, Sept. 19 (AP).—President Roosevelt said tonight that the United States must be prepared to share its food "with those who—without our help—might be faced with want."

In a letter to food dealers attending the seventh annual conference of the Super Market Institute, the President asserted, however, that "The Government does not intend to deprive any American citizen of sufficient food to maintain health and energy."

"The food problem of the United States has become an increasing part of our military effort," he said. ". . . It is therefore essential that there be complete cooperation between the producers and distributors of food in this country and those Governmental agencies charged with the duty of supplying food to our soldiers and civilian population."

Survey Shows Americans Plan To Spend 20 Billions After War

By Dale Harrison

Washington Bureau Chicago Sun

A 20 billion dollar postwar spending spree by Americans who will have pocketsful of savings to finance it was the rosy picture painted yesterday by a Nation-wide survey of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The study, undertaken to discover the postwar buying intentions of the Nation's families and their anticipated buying ability, indicated that 84 per cent of Americans are either accumulating money in savings accounts or by some other means.

Sixty-four per cent of American families believe that if the war ended tomorrow they would buy one or more major articles within six months. What would they buy? The survey showed this:

Three million, six hundred and seventy-five thousand families intend to buy motorcars—indicating an immediate postwar market for family automobiles of $3,307,500,000.

The indicated intention ot buy

For home furnishings — furniture, rugs, linoleum—the market will find $711,410,000 ready to be laid on the barrelhead.

One million five and forty thousand families plan to build or buy homes immediately after the war is over, presaging a post-war building boom of $7,184,800,000. (This is 50 per cent more potential home-owners than was indicated when the chamber made a similar survey eight months ago.)

Thirty-nine per cent of American home owners plan some sort of improvements on their properties within six months of the end of the war; 67 per cent of the farmers who own their own farms will invest in improvements—build outbuildings, repair property, build new tenant houses, etc., and 30 per cent of families who own property other than that in which they live will make improvements on such properties. This, the survey said, means an immediate postwar home and farm improvement market of at least $7,500,000,000.

The Department of Commerce's monthly publication, "Survey of Current Business," pointed out yesterday that individual savings this year will exceed 35 billion dollars. The article said that never before 1941 did annual savings of individuals exceed 10 billion dollars.

(The article argues that "the real danger is that because of those reserves, the aggregate demand for goods will exceed the supply, thus causing inflation. Inflation could reduce the purchasing power of wartime savings so that they would provide very little protection against the collapse which would follow an inflationary period.")

Kaiser's California Yard Launches Two More Vessels

By the Associated Press

One of the busiest ship launching schedules yesterday was at Henry J. Kaiser's Permanente Metals Corporation Yards in Richmond, Calif., where two Liberty ships, the George Sterling and the James J. O'Kelly, as well as a 19,000-ton troopship, the Gen. Hugh L. Scott, took to the water.

The Scott was named for the Kentuckian who was army chief of staff from 1914 to 1917.

A 10,500-ton Liberty ship named for the late Edward H. Sothern, the Shakespearean actor, was christened at the California Shipbuilding Corporation, Wilmington, Calif.

The New England Shipbuilding Corporation Yard at at South Portland, Me., produced it 109th vessel under the war program, the Liberty ship William H. Todd, honoring the founder of the Todd Shipyard Corporation, an affiliate firm.

Paratroopers' Dog Mascot Missing From N. C. Camp

San Francisco, Sept. 19 (INS).—Max, the Boxer dog mascot of an American paratroop division now with the Seventh Army, is missing and his master wants no stone left unturned in finding him.

Max, who gained fame by making parachute jumps with American paratroopers training at Camp Mackall, N. C., has wandered away from the camp, according to a letter received today by the wife of Max's owner, Maj. James Gray, somewhere overseas with the Seventh Army.

"Please make every effort to find him," the major pleaded in a letter to his wife in San Francisco. "Max is a human dog. He's got to be found."

Hunt for Killer Of 'Masked Marvel' Turns to Venice

Hollywood, Sept. 19 (INS).—The hunt for the killer who knifed David Gaspar G. Bacon, "masked marvel" of the movies, to death turned tonight to the beach resort town of Venice.

The development was a return to the scene of the crime, for it was in a bean field on the outskirts of Venice that the actor stumbled from his car a week ago today and died before he could tell who had stabbed him in the back with a stiletto.

Without knowing the exact identity of the person they sought, homicide detectives directed their search toward a young man who formerly had taken an active part in athletics at Venice High School.

Dutch Sailor Gets Medal After 2-Year Chase to Find Him

Philadelphia, Sept. 19 (AP).—The Netherlands government caught up with a Dutch sailor after a two-year chase today and presented him with a hero's medal for extinguishing fires on two bombed ships during the Nazi air blitz of London.

The name of the sailor, a storekeeper, was withheld because he has a wife and five children in Nazi-occupied Holland. P. J. Groenendall, consul for the Netherlands, presented him with the Kruis van Verdienste (Cross of Merit) in a ceremony aboard a Dutch merchantman here.

In ordering the decoration, August 8, 1941, Queen Wilhelmina issued a citation which said, "For outstanding bravery in risking his life to save two ships for the Allied cause."

St. Cyprian's Observes 50th Year at Mass

More than 1000 parishioners of St. Cyprian's Catholic Church, 13th and C sts. se., yesterday rejoiced at the congregation's golden jubilee solemn high mass.

Members of one of the largest and oldest Negro Catholic Churches in this area heard their parish's accomplishments praised by visiting dignitaries of the Catholic Church, among them the Most Rev. John M. McNamara, Auxiliary Bishop of Baltimore and Washington Archdioceses.

Bishop McNamara, also pastor of St. Gabriel's Church here, presided at the jubilee mass celebrated by Father McVeigh, St. Cyrian's pastor, Father Henry R. Graebenstein of Baltimore, a former pastor of St. Cyprian's, preached the sermon.

Marching in a colorful procession opening the mass were Bishop McNamara; the Right Rev. Msgr. Edward P. McAdams and Charles R. O'Hara, pastors of St. Joseph's and Holy Comforter Churches, respectively; the Very Rev. Msgr. Lawrence J. Shehan, rector of St. Patrick's Church and director of Washington Catholic Charities, and Fathers McVeigh, Graebenstein, Kelly, Luckett and Troch. Altar boys led the procession.

Fathers Kelly and Luckett were deacon and subdeacon, respectively, for the mass. Father Troch, assistant pastor of St. Cyprian's, was master of ceremonies. The Knights of St. John served as a guard of honor to Bishop McNamara. The parish choir's musical program was directed by Mrs. Emily Wells, organist.

The jubilee banquet in the parish hall followed the service.

Hillman Sees Plans for U. S. Imperialism

By the Associated Press

Minneapolis, Sept. 19.—Sidney Hillman, national chairman of the CIO Political Action Committee, in an address today to regional trade union representatives' conference in Minneapolis on labor's part in the world peace plans, charged that "there are forces in this country who today are laying grandiose plans for a new American imperialism," opposed to any constructive domestic postwar program.

Hillman is here to aid in the formation of labor political leagues for Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, North and South Dakota which he said will work to defeat Congressmen who voted for the Connally-Smith labor bill.

He said the "imperialistic" forces are hoping "to rise to power by an appeal to the isolationalist sentiments that still persist among us, and by exploiting the burdens and difficulties of the war to turn the voters against a constructive domestic program to meet postwar needs."

Hillman added that labor must "unite our political strength to preserve our government as a government of the people."

"We must not," he said, "permit it to fall into the hands of any group which will use it as the instrument of reaction at home and an imperialistic scramble for power abroad."

The C. I. O. leader said that a lasting peace plan must be based on the Atlantic Charter and include provisions for permitting all free people to fashion the form of government and economy best suited to their needs; that free activity of people's movements be encouraged; that peace must guarantee an economy of abundance "to all men everywhere"; and that close collaboration among United Nations after victory must be continued.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

—By Drew Pearson—

Memoirs of MacArthur

Louise Atwill, former wife of General MacArthur, is preparing her memoirs.

One incident in the scintillating tale, which will tickle almost every husband and wife, runs like this:

Scene. The MacArthur suite in Manila. Time: 8:35 p.m.

Mrs. MacArthur is seated before her dressing table putting a last do-dad in her hair. Her hair is long and not easy to manage. She has on an evening gown, obviously is dressed for an official dinner. Behind her stands General MacArthur, arms folded, looking very dour.

Mrs. MacArthur: "Doug, what do you mean by standing behind me with your arms crossed like that?"

The General: "You realize, of course, Louise, that we are due at Malacaan Palace for an 8:30 dinner and it is already 8:35?"

Mrs. MacArthur: "All right, uncross those Napoleon arms of yours and quit making me nervous. I'm hurrying, but I'm not going to the Governor's dinner looking like a frowsy hag."

(The General remains standing, arms folded on his chest).

Mrs. MacArthur: "I said uncross your arms and banish that Napoleonic pose. I'm not going to be dictated to."

Mrs. MacArthur: "I'll give you until I count 10 to uncross your arms."

(She begins counting. The General does not move).

Mrs. MacArthur: ". . . eight . . . nine . . . ten . . . All right you asked for it."

(Mrs. MacArthur breaks her hand mirror over the General's head. It cracks and flies in many pieces. Finally they go out to dinner).

Note: Friends of MacArthur's are divided regarding the significance of breaking that mirror. Some say that the bad luck from the mirror led to MacArthur's defeat at Bataan and the surrender at Corregidor. Others point out that the seven years of bad luck had run its course long before Bataan, and that MacArthur had had pretty good luck anyway before Bataan. So they conclude that either breaking a mirror may not mean much after all, or else the bad luck omen was dispelled by the fact that the mirror was smashed on MacArthur's head and that it was his wife who actually broke it.

[illegible] our relationship with our fellow men," he continued, in his sermon at 16th and O sts. nw. "Some of the disturbers of our inner peace are ill health, the consciousness of sin, and a failure to establish that fellowship with God which brings a sense of inner security.

"Peace comes with the possession of adequate resources, but a great many people interpret this to mean the possession of sufficient material substance, forgetting that no amount of material abundance can ever be a satisfying substitute for spiritual resources."

The church's three functions in a modern world are to proclaim the Gospel, to present an ethic and to produce character, the Rev. George Edwin MacDorman said yesterday at Kensington Methodist Church, of which he is pastor.

"All that the body is to man, the organized church is to Christianity," he declared. "In it, He (Christ) dwells, through it He is revealed, and by it He works."

Abernethy Gets Church Post

The Rev. Bradford S. Abernethy, son of Dr. and Mrs. Williams S. Abernethy, of 101 Earlstown Drive, Yorktown Village, Va., has been appointed director of a wartime emergency commission on democracy in racial and cultural relations, of the Federal Council of Churches, New York City.

Mr. Abernethy, a native Washingtonian, formerly served as co-secretary of the Federal Council's Commission to Study the Bases of a Just and Durable Peace. His father retired from the active ministry early in 1942 after 20 years' pastorate of Calvary Baptist Church, 8th and H sts. nw.

According to the Federal Council, the new commission's task will be to "analyze and re-state the democratic ideas and values for which the American churches stand," and to arouse public opinion to "the necessity for vigorous efforts to bridge the gap between democratic ideals and American practices."

More specifically, the commission will collate "essential facts" about the relations between racial and cultural groups in America, with special emphasis on "the relations between white and Negro, older America and newer America."
